THE POET.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY JNO. M. HICKEY.

His paths are on the high and holy mountains,
Where nature revels and the wild winds play;
He slakes his thirst at Thought's exhaustless fountains,
Where to his fancy nymphs Parnassian stray.
There is a cloudless clime, far, far away,
Beyond the eagle's most aspiring flight,
Where oft his spirit wanders when the day
Fades from the sky, and drinks in deep delight
Where forms ideal rove and win his wondering sight.

His heart rejoiceth when the stirring chime
Of tempests breaks upon his eager ear,
And braided lightnings gamboling sublime
In solemn grandeur to his eye appear;
Amid the elemental strife and stir
His spirit on majestic wing can soar,
Like the proud bird of Andes' heights, and hear
Music in storms, and mingling with their roar,
His own deep mind in kindred tones can pour.

He holds communion with the mighty dead,
Whose names are fadeless on the list of fame,
Those sons of light who, by ambition led,
The curse of death and darkness overcame;
He feels the dross-consuming, quenchless flame,
And longs with them in light to be enshrined,
To leave on earth one other glorious name,
Which, starlike in the firmament of mind,
Shall glow where clouds oblivious never shade or blind.

He strikes the harp, and weaves his thrilling song
While midnight's murmurs softly round him sweep,
Dreaming of glory's chaplet, while the throng
Of burning stars their vigils o'er him keep;
O'er scenes of old, where oft the muses weep
On broken altars and deserted groves,
His fancy wanders, drinking in the deep
Low tones of other years, or restored, roves
Where Learning held her courts and poets sang their loves.

To one who to such thoughts has given his soul
How vacant seems the hours in folly spent;
A power within him and beyond control
Proclaims far thence must be his banishment;
With nobler themes his visions must be blent,
On other fields his laurels must be won,
His hopes must scale the crystal battlement,
Where Mind hath reared her everlasting throne,
And Genius hails the light of an all genial zone.

Oh, how shall he, round whose aspiring brow
Have often floated visions all divine,
Forego such glories, and in supplance bow
Where throng the million at a lowlier shrine?
Can he forget his nature and decline
From starry heights unto the valley's shade?
Shall his home be the cloud, while o'er him shine
The lights he loves, and where his spirit strayed,
When life was in its morn and hopes around him played?

No: better far to him the guileless songs
Of the gay birds that hymn the oraise of spring,
The melody which to the breeze belongs,
And the glad sounds which o'er the waters ring;
His heart is mateless when it doth not cling
To stars, to mountains, to the deep blue sea;
To woman and her loveliness, which fling
The light of Heaven on Earth, and to the free,
Wild haunts where Nature dwells and woos idolatry.

A LILY AND A ROSE;

OR,

THE SCHEMER AND HIS VICTIMS.

CHAPTER XVI.

A COPPER HELL.

Still kicking and plunging like a pig caught for killing, Tim the red headed was carried up the dingy stairs, his captor at last stopping before a door, which was proclaimed by dor. Allyn, a stream of light pouring through a keyhole on to the dark passage. Here he knocked three times and whistled once, and Tim, silent for the moment, partly out of curiosity and partly through fear, heard a voice in Israelitish accent exclaim:—

"Who ish tare?"

"All right, mo," growled the knocker; "it's me—Tony."

"Oh!" said the voice inside; and immediately after Tim heard a noise, very like the drawing back of a bolt and the turning of a key and the door opened.

"Hallea!" exclaimed a little dried up old man, the largest part of whose body seemed his nose, "wot 'av yer got there, Tony?"

"A lily," replied Tony, curtly, stepping into the room, a tolerably large apartment, crowded with men and boys of every age and of every class of villainy. There was a loud shout of welcome from some of the company, a hurried nod from the rest as Tony entered, but all seemed too much occupied to give more than a moment's attention to the new arrival.

It was a "Copper Hell," or Whitechapel gambling saloon, and the filthy room, with its bare whitewashed walls, its floor reeking with the vile odor of stale tobacco and spilt malt liquor, its deal tables marked with sticky rings from the wet pewter pots, its single, glaring, naked gaslight and its company of vile, degraded and infamous wretches, was but another type of the hells of which Caprier's was the king and chief.

Although the salutations here were oaths and shouts instead of the languidly breathed "How d'ye do's," the attire of the gamesters mostly rags and filthiness, in place of the exquisitely fitting evening dress, though the roulette table consisted of a common deal board painted in colors, rendered half undistinguishable by grease and dirt, in lieu of the ormolu and ivory dice, and the croupier, an evil faced Jew, instead of the bland, courteous croupier at the St. James' Captrier's, the scene, the style of the establishment was identical and the dirty faces of the Whitechapel thieves, and the well bred countenances of the aristocrats, alike bore the same expression of avarice and excitement, of hatred and malice, of intense joy and deadly despair, of peace, excitement and unnatural, overstrained calm.

Both St. James' and Whitechapel were branches of the same tree, though one was decked with leaves green and pleasant to the sight, and the other was naked and hideous.

Crowded round the roulette table with eager, excited faces, were a number of men whose chief characteristic, it seemed to Tim, was their peculiar likeness to each other about their heads. For a moment the similarity puzzled him, but the reason first struck him all at once—they all wore their hair remarkably short.

The room was stifling, full of tobacco smoke and overpoweringly close, so that the croupiers "Now, shentleman, red, black, or white, make your gamesh!" came hazily through the fog and sounded more than enigmatical to the red headed Tim.

The ring of men threw down their pence upon either of the colors as the croupier spun the arrows round, again proclaiming that this was the time while the wheel was spinning for shentlemen to make their gamesh. As the pin stopped the eager winners stretched out long, dirty fingers and grasped at the stakes, while the losers cursed and yelled, and above all the horrid din the old Jew's voice was heard croaking out his invariable formula.

At the end of the room, with a barrel for a table, half a dozen men were sweating and swearing over dominoes, and every now and then a roar of delight or rage, evoked by bad or good luck, rose from them and mingled with the general uproar.

Close beside where Tony had thrown Tim, sat a long legged man with a face half covered by a grizzled grey beard and moustache. He was sitting before one of the usual round deal tables, smoking a short pipe and drinking from a pint pot as calmly and placidly through all the din, as a member of Caprier's would have enjoyed his cigarette in the silent smoking-room of St James' Club. Lying on a bench beside him was what looked remarkably like a bundle of dirty rags, but which was in reality a man. Apparently he was asleep, for the bullet head, with its closely cut hair, was half buried in the thick, short arms, and an occasional sound, half grunt, half snore, arose from the heap. The long haired man sitting at the table looked up for a moment as the man called Tony, entered, remarking, "Kid?" and receiving Tony's assenting nod, relapsed into his peaceful, placid silence.

"Well, major," said Tony, shouting to make himself heard above the noise, "ain't you been a playing?"

The major nodded.

"Yes, and blown every brown. The darned luck's again me to-night, Tony, Faker Bill's collared every joey."

"He's lucky one, is Faker Bill," remarked Tony, with an envious shake of the head and a glance towards the ring of gamesters. "Where's Jem?" he asked, "you sit still, d'ye hear, young 'un?" this to Tim, who had been stuck on the end of the bench, and was showing a strong disposition to fight in some way or other.

"Why, don't you see him," replied the major. "Here, Jem, wake up, a gentleman is taken after you," and the major laid a hand, by no means light, upon the heavy sleeper.

"Hush!" said Tony, suddenly, in a warning whisper. "Don't wake him, let's relieve this little 'un, and turn him out first; Jem's so un common greedy he'll want's to go halves."

"Just so, he would," assented the major, then transferring his hand from the sleeping Jem to the trembling Tim, he leisurely pulled him in front of the table and began to turn out his pockets.

"Here!" exclaimed Tim, "What are you doin'? Where's the bird cage as you were agoin' to show me?"

"What's that about a bird cage?" asked the major of Tony, without taking the slightest notice of Tim's protest, and releasing the half-sovereign from the corner of the handkerchief, where it had been kept for extra safety.

"Oh," explained Tony, "he came to Whitechapel to buy a cage."

"Where did you come from?" asked the major of Tim.

"South Audley street," replied Tim, through a mist of tears. "What are you going to do with that half sovereign? Where's the bird cage—let me go, d'ye hear?"

"Will you hold your row?" growled Tony. "You'll wake that gentleman lyin' asleep there."

"South Audley street, eh?" repeated the major. "Ain't that near Grov'nor Square?"

"I shan't tell yer," retorted Tim. Let me go, d'ye hear?" wriggling about like a young eel, and punching at the dirty hand that held his arm, "Where's the bird cage?"

"D——— the bird cage!" roared Tony, thoroughly tired of the subject, "hold your row, young 'un, and answer the gentleman!"

But Tim was not to be appeased, and re-commenced kicking and howling to such a purpose that several of the players looked around and yelled out for "order!" and Jem was awakened from his slumbers, and, raising his head, enquired with an oath of terrific meaning, "what the row was about?"

At sight of the new face, Tim stopped his cries of lamentation.

There certainly was enough in the countenance to arrest even a lad's attention.

The face suddenly raised from the short thick arms was a rugged one, with a queer mixture of villainy and honesty displayed.

The grey eyes, small and sharp as needles, fixed one like a knife; and there was a firmness and stability about the not badly formed lips that prepossessed one almost against one's will and judgment. A remarkable face it would have been had the owner moved in a higher grade of society; here, among the dregs and scum, it was wonderful in its intelligence and difference to the men of low, vile countenance around.

"What's the row?" enquired the awakened man.

"Hallo, Tony, at the old game?" What's the young 'un worth?"

"Not a brown!" answered Tony, eagerly evidently ignoring the half-sovereign.

"Not a brown, eh?" growled the other. "Is that correct, major?"

"Quite," said the major, curtly. "The kid's a duffer."

The man addressed as Jem rubbed his bright eyes wearily and relapsed into his old attitude, after first glancing comprehensively round the crowded room from the corners of his keen eyes.

Suddenly, after the lapse of a few moments, which were spent by Tim staring wonderingly at the rouge-et-noir table, Tony rose softly from his chair, and, catching hold of Tim, walked toward the door. Obeying his beckoning hand the major rose too, softly, and followed by the two men, passed and crept down the rickety stairs, Tony whispering to Tim—

"You hold your tongue, young 'un, or it will be worse for you," which mysterious threat the lean lad who was in no little fright and had fully made up his mind that he was about to be converted into eel pies on the spot, as he had read of stray boys being so served, kept his peace, and with his red hair bristling upright on his long comical head, suffered himself to be dragged along between the two unresistingly. With a nod to the landlord, the two men skirted the bar and entered a little room, whose door bore the legend "Parlor."

Carefully bolting the door, the major seated himself in a greasy chair near the window, and holding up his finger with an admonitory shake, addressed Tim with:—

"Now, my fine fellow, I'm going to hask you a few questions. Jest you take particular notice and answer correctly, or me and my friend here'll—— eh? won't we, Tony."

"Which we will," replied Tony, earnestly shaking his head, as if though reluctant to do so, he should feel it his duty in case of Tim's not answering correctly to make eel pies of him on the spot. Tim began to blubber half sullenly.

"Where's the bird?" he commenced, but a terrific grimace from the old man seated opposite stifled the familiar inquiry half way, and he changed it suddenly into—"Go on a basking me, I'll tell you everything you want to know, 'pon my sivey!"

This awful oath seemed to convince the two inquisitors of the honesty of Tim's intentions, and Tony was gracious enough to suggest that "the young 'un might sit down!"

The young 'un did sit down, bolt upright in a chair between the two, ready to answer as he had declared.

"Now, then," commenced the major, "have the kindness to repeat your haddress, my young friend."

"Where do you live," translated Tony.

"In South Audley street," repeated Tim, with severe directness.

"Just so," continued the major.

"Near Grov'nor square," Tim nodded.

Now who might you be a living with," insinuated Tony.

"Mister Bolton," repeated Tim, gaining a little courage and relaxing his stern attitude so far as to lean back.

"Oh! Mr. Bolton, my young friend," said the major.

"And what is Mr. Bolton?"

"A gentleman o' course he is!" answered Tim with dignity.

"O' course he is," repeated the major, glaring at Tony severely, as if he had asked the question, and it was very wrong of him—"o' course he is; just so; and he lives in a nice, big house, with a lot o' rooms and a kerwantity o' plate, silver candlesticks, spoons and snuffers, trays and vases and watches and mugs, and all them sorts of things, eh? Oh, my!" continued the major, throwing up his hands, with an envious sigh, and a grin that was intended for a pleasant smile.

"Now nice it is to be a young friend like our young friend a sittin' there, Tony; and live amongst sich lugshuries!"

"It are, indeed, said Tony, gravely. "I hope he's grateful," he added piously.

"I don't live amongst silver spoons and snuffers," said Tim, pretty well bewildered, staring from one to the other.

"Mr. Bolton don't have no such things; why, Gord bless your heart, old Scratch 'nd nick 'em all if we had 'em in five minutes!" And he grinned daringly at the very idea.

"What!" said the major and Tony in a breath, "old Scratch!"

"Yes, old Scratch, our Jackdaw."

"Oh!" exclaimed the major, rather relieved, "I see!" with a smile. "I thought you meant the devil personage, my young friend."

"But you surprise me!" he exclaimed, glancing at Tony as he spoke; "you perfectly surprise me about your master, my young friend. Not a silver spoon! Dear me, how sad!"

"No it ain't sad," retorted Tim; "don't I tell yer Scratch 'nd nick 'em."

"Hah! hah!" said the major, laughing faintly, but with a rather disappointed look upon his brazen old countenance, nevertheless. "Really I don't think our young friend can help us, eh?" he said, looking over at Tony. Tony shook his head sullenly, with something of disgust, but said suddenly—

"And don't you know any of the people as lives in any of the fine houses near about you, young un?"

"Ah!" said the major with a winning smile.

"No, I don't, he said Tim, "exceptin' Mr.———"

"And who may he be, my young friend?" said the major, with a poor semblance of carelessness.

"He's a hartist," replied Tim.

"Oh!" exclaimed both, in a chorus of strong unmitigated disgust. "Oh, yes, a hartist! Lives in a hattick on bread and cheese, and paints grizzly dogs, frame an' all, for ten-and-a-kick. Oh, yes, we know it!"

"Oh, no, you don't," retorted Tim, with high contempt. "This 'un ain't that sort of hartist. He's a gentleman, and don't paint dogs at all, but Julias Seizers, gal's faces, and women naked, and all them kind o' pickers. He ain't none o' your attick un's, he ain't. His rooms is a kind o' palace, all sorts of velvets and satins and silver and gold things a lyin' about; and he don't live on bread and cheese, he don't."

As the lad spoke the faces of the two men brightened, and winking significantly they drew nearer, listening to every word with intense eagerness.

"Oh! how glad I am!" exclaimed the Major with humble thankfulness, "that we are with our young friend Tony. He knows what a hartist is, he does. And there ain't many men as do."

"Just so," said he, rubbing his hands with a stealthy movement, "don't you think, major," with a wink, "the young 'un 'nd be the better for a drop o' something hot, say a leetle drain of old Jamaica and a Habernethy biskit?"

"Capital!" exclaimed the major, struck with the idea, and likewise rubbing his hands. "What's our young friend say to a drop of something sweet and hot and a cake?"

Tim, who had forgotten his fear by this time, and gradually thawed beneath the sun of the major's genial smile and manner, expressed himself agreeable, and, with some alacrity, the major jumped up to get it himself, so "as not to disturb the herman, who was a nervous young man, by the ringing of the bell," as he expressed it, and ambled to the door.

As he gently undid the bolt, and threw it open, he started back with an oath.

The man named Jem stepped in.

CHAPTER XVII

A MASTER-HAND.

There was an ominous smile upon the man's face as he entered that made the major shrink back with a frightened expression, as he stammered—

"Why, Jem, how you startled me!"

"I'll startle you, you old thief," said the man, striding into the room and clutching the major by the throat with a laugh of anger. "You cussed old fox, you thought to give me the go by, did you, why I'll throttle you, d——— you, if you play your tricks on me!" and he flung the elder roune fiercely from him, and turned upon the younger man—with a gesture that caused him to change sides of the table. "And you, Tony, you ear! I'll teach you to play the sneak; why, you dog, I'll mash you to powder!" and he made a step forward; with one huge iron hand he upnifted a chair, with so fierce and powerful a grasp, that Tim, cowering in his chair, fully expected that Tony would be "el-pied" there and then.

"Why, what's the matter, Jem, my dear?" whined the major, in a conciliatory tone. "We———"

"Hold your tongue, you white haired old fox!" growled Jem. "What's the matter! You want a little game all to yourself, you sly old beast. You give Jem the go-by because he happens to be asleep while the plant's on, do you? Why you old fox I'll have the game to myself—you shant touch it with the tip of your dirty fingers, neither you nor that cur, Tony!"

"Do you listening, Jem?" asked the major in trembling key, venturing to come forwars and lay his hand upon the angry man's arm hesitatingly.

"I was, you fox!" snarled Jem. "Put not the dog to sleep with both eyes shut, you fool, and I knew you'd get something in the wind when I see you creeping like a pair of serpents, and I followed you, you fox, and heard your little game all through."

"Look at that now, how sharp he is," exclaimed the major, to the company in general, and the ceiling in particular, with an air of admiration. He don't sleep with his eyes shut, he don't, do yer, Jem?"

The angry man growled, but stopped his short, fierce bear walk and flung himself on the table.

"So I says to Tony, didn't I, Tony?" continued the major, still insinuatingly stroking his white head in two hairs, "I says, Jem's tired, we won't wake him, Tony, but manage this 'ere kid ourselves, and then tell him arterwards, eh, Tony?"

"Jest so," said Tony, meekly, "swelp me die!"

"Yah!" snarled Jem, kicking the table viciously, and laughing a short, bark laugh.

"He did! swelp——" commenced Tony; forgetting his fear in his energies, and advancing from behind the table, but retreating again as Jem cut him short with another terrific "yah!"

"None of your lies, it won't do. I'm not a fool, nor a green 'un, to be sucked in, you cus'd old fox! Sit down! Stop, you can go and get me something hot and let the old fox pay for it."

Then as Tony slid out of the room, considerably hastened by a sudden movement of the athletic Jem as he passed, Jem turned to Tim.

"Come here." The lad, with much fear and trembling, rose from his chair, still clutching the glass in his hand until the tin sugar-crusher played a lively tune, and came up to the table. "What 'er you looking so d——d frightened about?" said Jem, "if ain't going to hurt you. Here, you fox, go and get him some more liquor, he wants backing up, don't you, young 'un?"

And the man who had been roaring like a wild bull a moment before and crushing the two men by the violence of his passion, put his hand almost tenderly upon poor Tim's shoulder and then pulled him up on the table beside him.

"Now, young red head," he said, as the major came back with Tony, bearing four steaming glasses of something hot. "Just repeat what you told those white livered cusses, will you? Here, take a sip first."

Tim, too frightened to disobey, took a sip at the red hot liquid, and, with many circumlocutions, repeated his task.

"And where does this artist live, eh?" said Jem, who had been tracing an imaginary something upon the dirty deal table with the forefinger of his strong, sinewy hand, but keeping his keen, thoughtful eyes fixed upon the face of the lad.

"In Warner street," replied Tom.

"And on the first floor, didn't you say?" said Jem.

"No, I didn't," said Tim. "I said the second floor."

Again the finger went to work, while there fell a pause; the two older men watching anxiously the thoughtful face of the burly Jem.

"Drink up your grog, my lad," he said, presently, and Tim, who began to like the flavor of the succulent mixture, obeyed with alacrity.

He was beginning to feel sleepy, very sleepy indeed, and the faces of the three men commenced to grow indistinct as if they were enveloped in smoke, then vanished and reappeared again.

He began to feel most comfortably dozy, and it was only by a great exertion he held up his head, and in a drowsy voice said:—

"Where—where's the bird—bird cage?"

"Never mind the bird cage, my young friend!" said the major, soothingly. "You'd better go home now, don't you think; my friend Mr. Tony will put you into a bus. It's really most fortunate that he found you, isn't it, eh?"

"Where's—where bird, where's the b-b-bird cage?" replied Tim.

"Let him alone, major," growled Jem," the young un's a gone coon."

"Do you think he wou'd be able to find us up, eh?"

"Sure he wouldn't," said Tony, confidently, "for I brought him a round-about way."

"Hem," said Jem, "these youngsters are sometimes uncommon sharp," and he gazed reflectingly at the red headed youth.

"He aint," said Tony.

"Look here," said Jem, shaking the now sleeping Tim, "are you awake?"

"Where's—where's the bird cage?" was the instant reply.

"He's a gone coon, he is," remarked the man, quietly, lighting a pipe. "Well, if you get into trouble through his tracking out this blessed den don't blame me."

"Oh, that's all right; he'd never find it," said Tony.

"It's to be hoped, for your sake, he won't," retorted Jem, with a significant nod, seating himself on the table again.

"What d'ye mean?" said Tony, with a slight appearance of temper; "we're all in the same boat, ain't we?"

"Oh, yes," said the major, wish a warning frown at Tony, "let's get to business. What do you mean to do, Jem, dear, about this little crib?"

"Mind your own business, you old fox," sharply answered Jem, "this is mine. You keep your tongue quiet and your fingers out of this affair, or I'll——" And the sudden movement, with the sharp flashing of the threatening eyes, spoke very plainly.

"Take this kid out of the way, do you hear, you cur!" he roared, suddenly, and Tony, with the noiseless movement, half shamble, half slide, caught hold of Tim's arm and shook him awake.

Rubbing his eyes and yawning like a young hippopotamus, Tim was dragged out into the street and popped into an omnibus, Tony, with the most gruesome countenance, requesting the conductor not to wake his young brother until they got to the Marble Arch, as he was very tired, through a row out all day, poor little chap!

And so it happend that Master Tim returned to South Audley street at half-past eleven o'clock, to Bolton's surprise and anger, in a state of great confusion, without the half-crown, and minus the half sovereign.

Why, where on earth have you been, Tim?" And where's the cage?" asked Joseph, as he opened the door to the young reprobate, and, shielding the candle with the sleeve of his night-shirt, gazed with unmitigated astonishment at the confused face of the lad.

"I dunno," replied Tim. "I forgot—I——"

Then, as the remembrance of the "something hot" flashed across his mind, he thought it better to conceal rather than confess, and added—

"I lost myself and dropped the half sovereign down a hairey."

So it came to pass that the little episode of the Whitechapel copper hell was never related until too late.

CHAPTER XVIII.

REMORSE.

The world is swift to be astonished, pleased, affronted, but swiftest of all to forget. What wonder ever reaches a greater age than nine days?

An empire falls and the world throws up its hands and wonders, but if a man but murder his wife and family down east, the world forgets the ruined dynasty and revels in each and every particular of the bloody tragedy, which, in its turn, is forgotten for something else.

So it was with the fearful death of the boy earl. Moralists held up their hands and cried "woe to the modern Babylon," and snatched at the fearful event as an illustration wherewith to point their homilies; newspaper writers in fiery half yard leaders, cried shame upon the Golden Hell and its frequenters, and requested, in fiercely, highly pitched periods, to be informed how much longer the legislation would suffer this deadly Upas of gambling to raise its envenomed head.

Sensational parsons chose the subject for their texts, and with a liberal imagination painted the awful scene of the boy's death with much zest and blood curdling; and the legislation went so far as to apoint a special commission to inquire into the matter which filled up some half dozen columns of the newspapers with their joint wranglies, made matter enough for ten new Blue Books, and then quietly ended and done nothing.

So Caprier's lived and flourished still, growing fatter, indeed, from the dread repute acquired by the tragic incident; but two of the principal actors in that fearful drama of death had deserted its luxurious halls.

After the hot words have out serpent wise by Raymond Garton, Lord St. Aubyn had grown calm and cold again with a sudden and intensified frigidity that had startled the few spectators.

He held his hand to his side and his eyes quailed for an instant before the glittering ones of Raymond Garton; and his mouth became haggard and drawn as with some terrible anguish.

The men gazing upon the sudden sign of some overpowering emotion, asked themselves:—Was there any truth in the words hurled back at the accuser—was there some hidden meaning in the threat, and the significant allusion to the past?"

But the question had to remain unanswered.

St. Aubyn's past, the history of that weary face in all its statue like coldness, was a closed book to the multitude, aye, to every one.

The world knew nothing of the nobleman whose name rang amongst the proudest in all the peerage of ancient descent, whose wealth was supposed to be fabulous, and whose hauteur and langor were a bye word and a proverb.

The words he had uttered when the indignant soul had burst the bonds of well-bred polish, and cried out against the sleek, smooth-faced tiger who had sucked the young Dale's blood, were repeated with the answering retort and created some sensation, but the world shrugged its shoulders and professed itself unable to solve the enigma, and treated St. Aubyn as a lion during the few weeks he remained in town. For the curse was working within the weary, remorseless soul of the man, working as unseen subtle poison creeps and creeps through the veins. His days were a weariness, his nights a horror. Sleep fled from him or visited him clothed in awful dreams, wherein the dead man's face stood out plainly and terribly, starting from the agonizing, death-dimmed eyes, and the voice of the slain gasping out its last curse—its last awful prophecy of unrest and remorse rang in his ears.

The dread skeleton St. Aubyn carried pressed to his heart wherever he went, and life, burdened by the terrible agony of remorse, became a torment and a curse.

Yet the face bore its mask bravely. No slab of marble ever told less of the toad within its heart than did the handsome face of the inward fire that was consuming the heart and soul of the nobleman.

Only once had the mask fallen, at the mention of Leonard Grantley's name, at the sight of the living brother of the dead man whose face and voice were ever present with him.

Then the pang of remorse, stirred up by the sight of the young artist, gnawed too fiercely to be hidden.

And this, the last of the house whose son he had slain, was young and inexperienced, and already in the hands of one of whom St. Aubyn had every reason to be suspicious.

One grand thought sprang up into the man's mind, one thought embodied in a single word, a word that sent a thrill of hope through his soul—reparation.

Could not the crime be expiated? Could not the life of the dying man had cursed be spent in watching unseen over Harold Grantley's brother?

There were many pits, the way was thick with gins and snares, he would guard the barren path, point out the pitfalls, warn him off the snares, lend a helping hand and sustaining arm to the young artist, whose claim for protection was overpowering upon the man who had slain his natural protector, and left him to battle against the world unaided and alone.

But even here the curse seemed working, and the dead man's ban always present with phantom eyes and laughter to jeer and scoff at the intense longing for reparation which St. Aubyn endured.

With watchful eyes he had followed every step of Leonard Grantley as he walked along Raymond Garton's drawing-room. He had seen his winning smile, also the dread which the name—heard his musical voice, with its manly, thoroughbred ring; and last of all, had seen the bright flush upon the artist's cheek and the sparkle in his dark eyes as he had bent over the fair singer, Lillian Garton, at the piano, and the watcher had felt the sharp burning pain of a new agony. For he loved. Loved with the mad intensity of a man in his winning years, and though he had crushed the tender emotion and buried it beneath the mass of remorseful feelings that ever weighed within his heart, yet the sight of the dead man's brother, bending over the downcast, unblushing face of the woman he loved, seemed so terrible an earnest, so fearful a foreshadowing of the fulfilment of the curse, that he could not bear it, and fled the sight.

Yet the grand idea should be carried out, and his visit to Joseph Bolton was the first step. Then Lord St. Aubyn's place in the world was vacant, and society told itself with a puzzled smile that the mysterious nobleman had started off on one of his singular voyages, the destination of which was as unknown and secret as the voyager himself.

THE PUZZLED PILGRIM.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY ON THE SQUARE.

The pilgrim was, though sound in health,
The poorest out of jail;
Yet, like an ailing man of wealth,
Would travel for his ale.
Ten miles he walked to "run his face"
Where never he had been—
In village strange a stopping-place
To make strange village inn.

"The Halfway House," he mused; "'tis quite
A wholesome sign—akin
To quarters good"—mine host' made right,
"I'll half-and-half take in."
He enter'd straight, and munched "a few"
Old cheese and crackers, free;
Then quaintly said:—"Some old and new
Mix in a mug for me."

The tapster's "mug" was "not the cheese"—
"I mean he says was mean—
And meanwhile he declined to please,
Before the means were seen;
Thus left the pilgrim in the lurch,
For long that thirsty tramp
Might search his clothes, and close his search,
Nor yet disclose a stamp

"Beshrew thy fears!" the pilgrim said;
"Friend tapster, be not wild,
But charge it, and—I want no head,
Not any; draw it mild.
I may not now augment your till—
To-morrow I'll have paid;
Time was when you had not a 'mill'—
You know how 'tis yourself."

The tapster thus:—"No tap stir
On played-out pilgrim's call;
Approach and read these words in my
Handwriting on the wall:—
No legend that you understand?
You think the lingo queer?
Why spell-bound stare?—read backward, and
Propel upon your ear!"

The pilgrim saw it by "them lamps"—
"Twas on" was plain as day—
He sighed, "that which he means only stamps,
I squat," and went his way.
Ye moral:—Pause in loose career
And see things as they are;
Who hopes to peace to reach his beer,
Due head must pay each bar.

THE DRAMA IN AMERICA.

ITS FIRST ESTABLISHMENT.

COMPILED FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY W. R. JENKINS.

The success which had attended Moody's efforts in the West Indies had induced William Hallam, the manager of the Goodman's Fields' Theatre in London, to send out an agent to New York to ascertain what prospects there were for bringing over a dramatic company, and, if the outlook was favorable, to prepare the way for the company under Hallam's management. This agent, Upton, on reaching New York, and hearing of the success of Murray and Kean's company, instead of honorably fulfilling the conditions of his engagement, got together a company and opened a season on Dec. 23d, 1751, with "Othello" and Garrick's farce of "Lethe." His attempt at management, whether through the inapacity of the performers, or the disinclination of the people, justly proved a failure, and not so justly caused a considerable amount of trouble for Hallam's company which afterwards appeared. Dunlap, in his "History of the American Theatre," ascribes to Hallam the introduction of the drama into the United States; and, although he is wrong as regards the introduction, to his company and its manager, Lewis Hallam—who brought it over—belongs the credit of being the first company of regular actors who performed in the country. Hallam's company sailed from England during the month of May, 1752, and owing to Upton's treachery, the company, instead of visiting New York first, as had been originally intended, landed at Yorktown, Virginia, after a very pleasant voyage of six weeks, during which rehearsals had been constantly given on the quarter deck of "The Charming Sally," the vessel which brought them over. Having obtained permission from Governor Dinwiddie to erect a theatre, they proceeded to Williamsburg, then the capital of the colony, where they fitted up a suitable building for their purpose, and on the 5th of September commenced their performances with the "Merchant of Venice" and "Lethe." Among those who then appeared was Lewis Hallam, Jr., afterwards for many years the leading actor and manager of theatrical enterprises in America. He made his debut on this occasion—he was only thirteen years old—in the character of Portia's servant, but overcome with stage fright he was unable to say a word, and bursting into tears, ran ingloriously off the stage. This performance was preluded by an opening address written by one of the company named Singleton, and spoken by Mr. Rigby, which, as it was the first composition of its kind delivered in the United States, we append.

To this New World, from famed Britannia's shore,
Through boist'rous seas were foaming billows roar,
The muse, who Britons charm'd for many an age,
Now sends her servants forth to tread your stage;
Britain's own race, though far removed, to show
Patterns of every virtue they should know.
Though gloomy minds through ignorance may rail,
Yet bold examples strike where languid precepts fail.
The world's a stage, where many men act their parts;
The stage, a world to show their various arts;
While the soul, touched by nature's tenderest laws,
Has all her passion round in virtue's cause.
Reason we hear, and candid may approve,
But all's inactive till the passions move.
Such is the human mind, so weak—so frail,
"Reason's her chart but passion is her gale."
Then rise the muse to waft the virtue o'er
The sea of life where reason points the shore.
But, ah! let reason guide the course along,
Lest passion, listening to some syren's song,
Rush on the rocks of vice, where all is lost,
And shipwrecked virtue renders up the ghost.
Too oft, we own, the stage, with dangerous art,
In wanton scenes has played the syren's part;
Yet if the muse, unfaithful to her trust,
Has sometimes strayed from what is pure and just,
Has she not oft with awful, virtuous face,
Struck guilt with dread thro' all the crowded stage;
Made tyrants weep, the conscious murderer stand
And drop the dagger from his trembling hand?
Then, as you treat a favorite fair's mistake,
Pray spare her foibles for her virtue's sake.
And while her chastest scenes are made appear
(For none but such will find admittance here,)
The muse's friends, we hope, will join our cause,
And crown your smiles with your applause.

The satisfaction given by this company in Virginia was of such a description, that, on their departure, Governor Dinwiddie gave them his official recommendation, not only as being excellent comedians, but as "properly behaved" gentlemen and ladies. Under these favorable auspices they then began a travelling tour, visiting Annapolis, as we have me tioned, and several other of the towns in Maryland—then of relative importance, both socially and commercially—after which they gradually approached New York, which seems to have been the Mecca of their hopes.

On their arrival in New York city, however, instead of being cordially welcomed, as they had anticipated, they found a very strong opposition fully arrayed against them, the chief shield of which lay with the municipal authorities, who refused them permission to perform. Hallam, finding the secret of this stringent opposition was largely due to the career of Upton, who had preceded him, presented to the city magnates a very humble petition, setting forth the great expense he had been at in bringing the company thither, and promising that he and his company "would support the dignity of the stage with proper decorum and regularity," ending up his appeal with a little judicious flattery, which succeeded, at last, in mollifying their opposition and obtaining a reluctant permission to perform. Having erected a theatre, certainly not one of the most substantial or ornate description, but yet suitable for the purpose, Hallam began his season on the 17th of September, 1753, with Steele's comedy of the "Conscious Lovers" and the ballad farce of "Damon and Phillida," and after a successful inauguration he succeeded in continuing his first season prosperously until the 18th of the following March, at which time the company departed for Philadelphia, from whence Mr. Hallam, sometime previously, had received overtures from several prominent citizens to give a season there.

As the law against theatrical exhibitions was still in force there, Hallam, as a matter of policy, had sent on an agent in advance, to mollify, if possible, the opposition of the law, and to prepare the way against the arrival of the company. This agent, however, had not succeeded in arranging matters, and Hallam, in person, was compelled to go on to petition the governor for permission to open a theatre. On his arrival in Philadelphia he found the citizens divided into two hostile parties, fuming each other furiously with remonstrances, petitions and pamphlets, all serving to prove the morality or immorality of the drama. At last the theatre party prevailed, and the governor granted his consent, expressly stipulating, however, that Hallam should "offer nothing indecent or immoral," that the company should perform one night for the benefit of the poor, and that the manager should give ample security for all debts he should contract.

Under these auspices, and in the face of a powerful and ramp nt opposition, who, during the whole of the season, kept issuing anti stage pamphlets and remonstrances, the company came from New York, and in April, 1754, having converted a storehouse into a theatre, opened Peter White in "Mr. and Mrs. White." Shortly after he retired to his farm on Long Island and paid considerable attention to agricultural pursuits. He was somewhat time after ward induced to go on the stage from retirement and was engaged by Bernard's Museum, where he continued for several years, and became a great favorite with the audiences that patronized the lecture room of that establishment. He was in excellent actor, possessing a fine appreciation of humor, and though his face was red and was burned, it was never coarse or vulgar. His second wife was the daughter of a farmer residing on Long Island, by whom he had eight children. She died about 1857, and the first of his children whom he had reached maturity was a daughter of the last died. His third and present wife is a daughter of the late Gen. Hawkins, of Stony Brook, Long Island, in which place Mr. Hadaway is now residing upon his farm, having retired from the profession some few years since.

THOMAS H. HADAWAY, COMEDIAN.

This popular comedian was born at Alric, Worcestershire, Eng., in 1801. At the age of twenty he joined a strolling theatrical company and continued in comedian career until the year 1831, when he obtained an appearance in London, Eng., and achieved success. He was, while acting there, engaged by Thomas S. Hamblin, then managing the bowery Theatre, in this city, and immediately sailed for America, accompanied by his wife, who was professionally known in London as Miss Hallande, a lady of great personal beauty and possessing considerable skill, both as an actress and vocalist. On November 16th, 1831, Mr. Hadaway made his American debut at the Bowery Theatre as Dominie Simpson in "Gay Mannering," his wife acting Lucy Bertram. On the same night he acted Robin in "No Song, No Supper," his wife playing Margaretta. He at once achieved success. On Aug. 22d, 1832, his wife died suddenly of cholera, having performed on the previous evening. The next year opened for the season of 1832-3 by Bowerbank and Pratt, for the Chestnut Street Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. He then went to the Walnut Street Theatre, in that city, under the management of P. C. Wemyss, and continued there under E. A. Marshall's management, remaining in Philadelphia for twelve years. He then returned to the Bowery Theatre, making his re-appearance July 23d, 1844, in the character of Matthew Mopus, in "What Will the Broad say?" Theatre opened, Sept. 9th, 1847, Mr. Hadaway was a member of the company, and on September 20th, 1848, he opened at Burton's Chambers Street Theatre, playing Peter White in "Mr. and Mrs. White." Shortly after he retired to his farm on Long Island and paid considerable attention to agricultural pursuits. He was somewhat time after ward induced to go on the stage from retirement and was engaged by Bernard's Museum, where he continued for several years, and became a great favorite with the audiences that patronized the lecture room of that establishment. He was in excellent actor, possessing a fine appreciation of humor, and though his face was red and was burned, it was never coarse or vulgar. caused another one to be erected on Orange-st wharf for the reception of his company; but having neglected to obtain the gracious acquiescence of the "city fathers," he was somewhat astonished, on his arrival, to find that that sagacious body were decided

To Correspondents.

☞ We never answer questions by mail. All addressed to us seeking information will be answered through this column only.

REFEREE, St. John, N. B.—The best four-oared time for six miles, with a turn, is 36:30, made by Robt. Fulton, George Price, Samuel Hutton and Robt. McLaren, in the lapstreak boat James A. Hard Nut, weighing nearly 1600lbs., St. John, Sept. 10th, 1868. It is claimed that they made the first three miles in 15:00. As the watches were not stopped at the end of the three miles, however, neither that nor the time made by the Paris crew to the upper stake-boat on Aug. 23d, viz.:—18:02, are upon record.

F. H. S., Washington.—The Chicago nine claim a series won from the Rockfords, but the Rockford scorer informed us that they stood two each. One of the Haymakers' games was accidentally left out. Errors cannot well be avoided when the figures of the scorers are incorrectly sent in, as some times, while other games are not reported at all in the eastern journals. Some of the Keokuogs and Rockford scores are yet wanting. Scorers send in records of victories but forget defeats, sometimes.

F. W. C., Buffalo.—As neither boat was awarded third place the bet should be drawn, as should the second also, Goslar having been disabled; that is, providing the terms of the wager were as stated. Goslar was a length or more ahead when taken sick, which was pulled by Sisler, Brown and Kelley, but pulling Sisler again, he regained his old swimming the lead. He was again taken sick, however, and had to pull ashore.

ALERT, Phila.—Had the Alerts exceeded their opponents' score in their incompleted innings, then they would have won, even if the game had been called at the time; but as they did not when the game had been called, it had to be decided by the score of the last even innings played.

BARNEY, Calais, Me.—See report in another part of this issue. The course is said to have been an exact four miles, but we are inclined to consider it less, as we learn that the starting stakes were placed some distance below the spot where the buoy formerly marking the course was anchored, the change being made in order to secure a better course for all the boats entered.

J. G. G., New Haven, Conn.—Eleven bridges in all cross the Thames in London, viz.:—London Bridge; London, Chatham and Dover Railway (Cannon street); South-Western Railway (Waterloo); Chatham and Dover Railway (Charing Cross); Hungerford; Westminster; Lambeth; Vauxhall; New Pimlico, and Battersea. The first first cross the Thames in the City of London proper.

J. G. G., New Haven, Conn.—If a bets B that he will make three runs or base hits than B, and he fails to do so, he loses.

G. L. F.—A match series in the championship arena is best three out of five, and the club winning the most of these match games or series wins. In case of a tie, then single games count. No professional contests are "regular" in this season, except they are one of the five games constituting the championship series.

CARROLL.—It matters not in what order the cards are played to form a sequence in cribbage, so long as the sequence is completed, without a pair intervening, or the sequence is not broken by a card that does not connect. Cards played thus—3, 1, 2, form a sequence of three.

ED. W., Cleveland, O.—1. Your opinion is very much at fault. In a correct position, taken from life, Spalding throws 90 feet, 44¾ inches, 38 min. 30 sec. R. Fulton, Geo. Price, Samuel Hutton and Robt. McLaren, at St. John, N. B., Sept. 10th, 1868.

WILLIAM, Jr., Detroit.—Scarlet best amateur trial ground, is 13 feet 11½ inches, against Chas. A. Loomis, Sept 23d, 1870. His best jump in a match with Bob Way is 13 feet 2 inches, July 30th, 1870. Jack Howard's best running jump, which is the best on record, is 20 feet 7 inches.

E. S., Springfield.—1. Lexington's 7:19¾, at New Orleans, is the fastest four mile time. 2. Pachadeen and Salina have each run a mile in 1:43, which is the fastest on record. Both did it at the Lexington spring meeting this year. 3. A wins the bet. 4. Yes.

OLD READER, Port Deposit.—Budd Doble was formerly joint owner with Barney Jackson of Goldsmith Maid, but they sold her quite spring to Mr. Alley. Budd is the driver, and not Jim, as his name unluckily owns Lucy, but we cannot certify it. Assuredly Budd Doble has no interest in her.

STRAKENHOLDER, Pittsburgh.—Ten third prize was awarded to the Sibleys, as they traversed all the starting point, and signified their willingness to row over at the time appointed by the referee, who expressly declared that the crew refusing to row (as the Taylor-Winship did) should forfeit all claim to the prize.

H. D. P., Boston.—The nine have won a series from the Olympics, Rockfords and Athletics, and now stand second on the list of championship contestants, the Chicagos being first and Athletics third.

SCOTTSMAN, Savannah.—1. We prefer the Olympic player in preference to the Mutual man, simply on account of more "headwork" in his fielding. 2. The Olympics did not defeat the Reds in 1869, nor may either club.

W. A., Rockford, Ill.—The championship committee decides all disputed contests in November next. The scorer of the Rockford club informed us that they had one more game to play with the Chicago club.

SCOTTSMAN, N. O.—If Jack was low, then B, with one to go, won; but if A, in taking Jack, also held a lower card, then he (A), with two points to go, won. Low counts before Jack, except when Jack is turned up.

WARNE, late BLOWER.—1. The partner, when he assists, may not play it alone. He may order up the trump, however, and then play it alone. 2 Two points for a euchre. 3. Don't understand the question. 4. "American Hoyle," by Dick & Fitzgerald.

J. E. O., Athens.—1. Never having heard either band play we cannot give an opinion. 2. New York, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Chicago and Baltimore are the seven largest cities on the United States.

J. M. G.—If such a foolish proviso as you mention was made, then the wager should be drawn. If not, B is clearly entitled to the stakes. A verbal agreement, made in the presence of witnesses, is as binding as though it was written out.

H. S. L., Rutland.—Bill Lang ran ten miles in 51min, 26sec., in England, 1863. That is the fastest time for 10 miles, even. A number of others have run ten miles in an hour, and Deerfoot ran 11 miles 790 yards in that time.

A. S. B., Newark, N. J.—"East Lynne" is a dramatization of Mrs. Wood's novel of that name, and was first performed at the Holiday Street Theatre, Baltimore, Md. C. W. Taylerare was the author of the dramatization.

DUBOIS TROY.—The Rockfords sent in their entrance fee in August, and as it was not returned to them, they regard themselves as in the arena, until the committee decide otherwise. That they will be ruled out from not applying in time, there is but little doubt.

W. J. Evansville.—There was no champion club in reality last season, though both the Chicago and Mutual clubs claimed it. The first legitimate championship contests are those of the present season.

FIRST BASE.—The rule is quite plain on the subject. The moment the striker is put out by being forced to first base, or crowded to be forced to vacate the base, and in order to be out must be touched with the ball when he is off the base.

STAKEHOLDER, New York.—Twenty miles in harness has been repeatedly trotted in sixty consecutive minutes. Flora Temple, Lady Palmer, John Stewart, and Capt. McGowan have all accomplished the feat.

W. A. MOORE, Boston.—We accept your explanation, and trust that you will be less hasty in future, in your relations with newspaper people. As we cannot promise when space could be spared for the poem, it would be unwise to accept it.

W. HUDSON.—There has never, that we are aware of, been a match made to run so long, as the one in Pennsylvania to whom we have referred your question consider it possible. It would not, however, keep correct time.

HARRY, Chicago, Ill.—1. The dealer should discard before taking the trump card, which he should leave on the pack until it is necessary to play it on a trick. 2. The first answers your second question.

S. L., Des Moines, Ia.—1. C having made the trump, D had no right to play it alone. 2. B having called. A, the dealer, had no right to play it alone. No one can play a lone hand except he who makes, takes up, or orders up the trump.

PRIZE.—1. It is one of the strongest. 2. Wright's averages show him to be the best all-round fielder in Athletic nine in the country, with good management, training and discipline; but without these essentials it has become third rate.

LONDON ECHORD.—By withdrawing from the field they forfeited the game. The umpire is the sole judge as to whether it is too dark to play or not.

AMATEUR.—We cannot say; but the two Wrights, Barnes, Spaulding, Gould, Birdsall and Schaffer will probably be in the list of players selected to compose the Boston twenty-two.

GEO. H. AND HENRY F.—The dealer's partner, in ordering up the trump, was not obliged to play A alone. It was only equal to an assist.

NUTIRE.—1. The boat whose stern first crosses the line wins the race. An argument like that used by your friend is absurd. 2. The best six mile time by a four-oared crew is 35:20.

E. S., Newark.—Small rigs in a mile, in 4:17¾, making a dead heat, are Richards. He also ran a mile, down hill, in 4:02, but that does not go on record against 4:17¾.

J. H. J., Salem, Mass.—The "Emerald Ring," written by John Brougham, for Barney Williams, was first produced at the Broadway Theatre, Feb. 15th, 1858.

RENSSE.—It was declared a dead heat between those crews for third place, but as the Biglins were rated, about a quarter of a length behind the first two, it is but in justice to A. & B.

H. B., Summit Hill, Pa.—1. Had you not better find out if your letter reached the man before publishing the notice? 2. The population of London, Eng., is three and a half millions.

C. J., Athens, O.—The quickest passage by steamer from Liverpool to New York is 8 days, 21 hours and 37 minutes, by the Inman steamer City of Paris; left Liverpool Nov. 20, 1867.

R. B. P., Brooklyn.—1. Oswego, 17:28½; Red Wing, 17:28¼; Brown, 17:47¼. No one who knows aught about rowing credits the time given.

FOURTEENTH STREET.—1. At euchre, a player having once named the trump, he may not change it. 2. B, having once passed, could not order up.

YOUNG SCRIBBLER.—Your questions refer to the private domestic affairs of Miss Lydia Thompson, and such questions we never answer.

SUBSCRIBER.—If the bet was that the Wards would not be scored than second (whether so worded or merely implied), then the man who bet on them wins.

CONSTANT READER.—If the shoemaker actually charged and was paid twenty cents by A, then B won; if but fifteen, then A won. Sure thing does not interfere with it.

BOAT BUILDER, Philadelphia.—The Paris crew, of St. John, never rowed together at all at Boston, nor were they ever beaten by either the Wards or Harvards.

OCCASIONAL, Washington.—Wm. B. Curtis is said to have lifted 3,300 lbs., in barrels. Do not know how much the other gentleman you mention can lift, or has lifted.

O. H. E., Hillsboro, Ill.—The umpire not having signed the score book, and the scorers having agreed upon the correction of the error, the game stands, by the corrected score, a tie.

O. H. E., Hillsboro, Ill.—The Horse Shoker Boy ought to have been distanced for not completing the heat, and had no right to start again for the next.

JULIAN, Carlisle, Pa.—1. We believe there are no museums either in San Francisco, Cal., or Sacramento. 2. Mardi-gras occurs upon Easter Monday.

WALTHAM AND WINNISIMMET.—News forwarded too late for insertion in full.

YOUNG CITY, Cleveland.—If A bets B that he will make three runs or base hits than B, and he fails to do so, he loses.

RED STOCKING.—Yes; he played in the out-field and at third base for the Athletics.

J. D., Newark, N. J.—Apply at one of the dramatic agencies, advertised in our columns.

JOHN SHEPPARD, Louisville.—A deposit must accompany your challenge.

S. B., St. John.—Unless the bet was made play or play, it is a draw.

ENQUIRER.—They did not want to make the match for a larger sum than was rowed for, but the Paris crew did.

F. W. R., Utica, N. Y.—Goldsmith Maid's time will now be recognised as the best one mile heat on record. Send us your address.

F. P. D., Kokomo, Ind.—We cannot refer you to any one who has them for sale.

A. C., Boston.—Read his record, as published in last week's CLIPPER.

A. H. S., New Orleans, La.—Great Britain has the strongest navy and the largest power at command.

W. B. C. D.—The billion is enumerated by the same number of figures in both countries.

CHAS. D., Princeton.—Mace beat Bob Travers, two rings, Feb. 21 [illegible] Travers failing without a blow.

H. J. M., East Cambridge, Mass.—As A weighed 140 lbs and score 100, he won.

WM. WARNE.—The tonnage of the vessels mentioned is as follows:—Hamilton, 367.9, O. M.; Sappho, 274.4, O. M.

E. A. F., Pittsburgh, Pa.—Kaye pulled on the same side with Coulter.

READER, Waltham, Mass.—If the bet was play or pay, you lose; if not, it is a draw.

CONSTANT READER, Boston.—If the bet was play or pay, the man who bet on the St. John crew loses; if not, it is a draw.

UNO, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.—We do not require a correspondent in your town.

A. K., Philadelphia, Pa.—Miss Ella Germon will be a member of Mr. Wallack's company the present season.

SPOON OAR, Phila.—Write to Jas. Elliott, George Roehr or Thos. Pearce, in our care. They are all excellent.

PEELE.—He was a catcher at one time, but whether for the Athletics or not we cannot say.

H. S.—No runs are scored when chances to put the side out for a blank score are offered before a run is scored.

SPECTATOR, Greenfield.—Yes, by the Rockfords, July 4. Score, 7 to 5.

J. B. Steel Saginaw, Mich.—According to the New York rules, 30 seconds time.

W. J. G.—The Atlantics defeated the Mutuals on the Capitolines on Thursday, 14th inst., by a score of 3 to 1 in a six innings game.

C. W. Adams, Providence.—The sketch is on file for publication as soon as we can find room for it.

C. Scribner, Lynn, Mass.—We are already attended to in that matter.

SIR, THE GOVERNOR.—1. No. 2. There would be nothing wrong in selling it for the Grocer's Social Club.

P. Hammond, O.—1. We do not require one. 2. Bass is in Brooklyn.

J. P. K., Manitou, N. Y.—The dealer cannot play it alone after having ordered up by his partner.

GAY, St. Louis.—Poker is a show game, and, although A miscalls his hand, it shows that he had what the money.

C. H. Williams, Pa.—Penn Pimple's best time was 3:19¾, made at Kalamazoo, Mich.

KELLYBOY.—1. He must decide balls, and jumped on level ground. 2. They do not.

R. W., post J. C., Macon, Ga.—Apply to Ed. James. He'll hunt up a suitable boat for you.

DOCK.—Mace informed us that his height is 5 ft. 9½in. without his shoes.

S. N. F., Pickell Town, O.—1. A lecturer does not require any license in Ohio. 2. Yes.

E. H. R., New York.—Trustee, Lady Patten, Capt. McGowan and John Stewart have each trotted 20 miles in the hour.

INQUIRER, Newburgh, N. Y.—Thank you; but we have no vacancy.

E. HAY.—It is A's deal. It would be unfair for B to lose his beg.

INQUIRER, Washington, D. C.—We have no record of such races.

UNBROKEN BOY.—A deposit must accompany your challenge.

DR. PIERRE FRANK.—Will probably have a place in our next.

H. C. HEAD, Sand Point, Onondaga.—Write to 19 Philadelphia.

NEWS OF THE WEEK BOILED DOWN.

☞ The French Assembly on Sept. 18th accepted the Customs treaty concluded by the representatives of France and Germany. Alsace and Lorraine are included in the treaty, the consequence of which are the immediate evacuation of the Departments of the Aisne, Ardre, Cote d' Or and Jura, and the reduction of the German army of occupation to 50,000.

☞ President Thiers' first message was received and read in the French Assembly on Sept. 15th. In it he recommends a speedy adjournment. The Assembly on that day adopted a bill providing for the prorogation of the session from Sept. 17th to Dec. 4th, and a committee of 25 will be appointed to control the government during the recess.

☞ The Maryland Republican State Convention met in Baltimore on Sept. 19th, and nominated Jacob Tome for governor, Alexander Randall for attorney-general, and Lawrence J. Brengle for state comptroller. General Grant was also re-nominated for the presidency.

MURDER OF JACOB AND BETSY HARPER.—The double murder of the brother and sister of John Harper, the well known Kentucky turfman and owner of the famous racehorse, Longfellow, has created a profound sensation among racing men. This terrible tragedy occurred on Sunday night, the 10th inst., at the homestead of Elk Creek Farm, near Midway, Woodford county, Ky., and was not discovered until the following morning, when the body of Jacob Harper, or, as he was commonly termed, "Jake," was found lying upon the bed in which he had been sleeping, and his skull crushed in by three blows from a fourth weapon. The woman was lying with a wound in the head apparently caused by the same or a similar weapon. She was sensible, and on being questioned as to who committed the deed, replied that she did not know, but thought it was a negro. She was despatching to the house, hidden in a bush, and covered with blood. In a field near by three negroes were arrested who had blood on their clothing, all of them belonging to the plantation; and two of the number, Jim and Jenkins, had "skeers" on the farm. The former had gone to the Lexington fall meeting with Longfellow, Exchange, Express and Plaintiff a few days before, or it is probable that he would also have fallen a victim to his cupidity. A reward was offered immediately after the despatch notifying him of the catastrophe had reached him. The family originally belonged to Virginia, and from them Harper's Ferry derived its name. There was another brother, Wash Harper, who died a few months since of the consumption of the old homestead which has just been the scene of this tragedy, by Lue Monday, the rebel guerilla, for resisting the stealing of the thoroughbred horses in the stables of John Harper, the owner of Longfellow, is the youngest of the quartet.

RACING AND TROTTING NOTES.—Enquirer, the famous son of Leamington, who never knew defeat, has hopelessly broken down and will never run again. His owner, General Buford, was anxious to run him against Longfellow at Lexington, (whom he had beaten and distanced at three years old,) at the recent Lexington fall meeting, and it was while in training for that contemplated encounter his leg gave way and terminated his racing career. He will now be put to the stud.....The Orange county stallion, Conductor, owned by Mr. James Post, of Middletown, N. Y., and leased as a stallion by Capt. G. H. Morris, of Lexington, Ky., died suddenly at the stables of the latter on the 10th inst., of apoplexy. He was a high bred horse, being sired by Ryadick's Hambletonian, dam by Messenger, Jr., a son of Messenger Duroc.

THE LEXINGTON FALL MEETING.—The sixth and last day of the fall meeting at Lexington, this year, was a postponed, on account of the heavy condition of the track from the previous rains, until the next fair day and good course. The anticipated sport of the day comprised a sweepstakes for all ages, a three mile heat race, and the Consolation handicap sweepstakes for horses.

DEATH OF A KENTUCKY TURFMAN.—Mr. Joseph Shawhan, the oldest turfman in Kentucky, met his death on Saturday, the 16th inst., in consequence of a fall from his horse. He was ninety years old, and was distinguished as having been the first manufacturer of whiskey in Bourbon county, Ky.

THE BARTON CREW IWIN THE FOAR-OARED RACE.

KELLEY TAKES THE SINGLE SCULL PRIZE.

After one postponement on account of rough water, the rowing regatta at Longueuil, Canada, came off on Thursday, Sept. 14th, the number of people present being considerably less than on the day preceding. The judges were Judge Coursol and Capt. Shepherd; referee, L. Cuthbert; starter, Capt. Hibbard for the Renforth crew; Major Wallis, G. T. R., for the Tyne crew, and W. Notman for the Barton crew. Capt. Rudolph officiated as starter.

The first crew to appear was the Taylor-Winship, followed successively by the crews of the Barton and Renforth. Lots were drawn for choice of position and resulted as follows:—Barton first, next to the shore; Taylor-Winship next, and Renforth outside. The start was given by the word "go," and the Barton got away in the lead, and so kept it to the finish, they having a lead of two lengths at the first turning stake, which they increased to three, the Barton crew making 42 strokes a minute, the Taylor-Winship 40, and the Renforth 42. The two latter rapidly pulled ahead of the Barton,

WARD AGAINTS EGGARDUS' CHALLENGE.—The challenge issued by Nathan Dunne, on behalf of A. H. Sagerdus, has been accepted, as will be seen by the following:

NEWARK, Sept. 18th, 1871.

FRANK GOMM, Esq.—Dear Sir—I accept Sagerdus' challenge. I will back my brother, James Ward, of Toronto, Canada, to shoot 100 live birds, 30 yards rise, each from grounds traps, for $500 a side, and to shoot all the birds that fall dead. The match to come off at Buffalo on the 25th of October, and to be governed by the Canada rules for pigeon shooting. I will be in Buffalo next week, and put up $500 with Robert Newell. ROBERT WARD.

A MATCH AT PIGEONS, for $100, took place at Watsonville, on Sept. 14th, between Darius Ward and Charles Stickel, at 50 birds each, 30 yards rise, 21 inch rise, 80 feet boundary. The referee ordered the tie to be shot off then and there, and Stickel refusing, the match was decided in favor of Woodruff.

A SWEEPSTAKES pigeon match, 15 birds each, for $50, is to take place at Tom Taylor's Ida Hotel, Greenville, N. J., on the afternoon of Saturday, Sept. 23rd, at which good scores by professional Pain, John Taylor, Miss Johnson and other celebrated shots are expected to take part.

THE RING.

MACE AND SLADE HAVE A GO.—At Mrs. Kerrigan's booth, at Harry Hill's Variety Theatre, on Thursday afternoon, September 14th, the throng of spectators were afforded a little amusement of a kind which had not been expected. Sparring was one of the attractions of the occasion, and, among others, Jim Mace and Harry Slade, an accomplished boxer, who had, we believe, appeared with Mace in public several times previously, volunteered to put on the gloves. Slade requested Jim to play light, which the latter did, but Harry didn't—on the contrary, after sparring awhile, he suddenly "went for" Mace, who was not expecting it, and administered a crack on the proboscis which caused a slight abrasion of the skin. This nettled Jim—who was still more riled by Slade pointing at it and grinning, as he stepped back. Pushing in again, Mace met him with a one, two, threes with the left, quick as lightning, and, whirling around like a top, Slade dropped on the floor in a heap, with pasted lips and a badly-damaged visual organ. The affair created quite an excitement, and it was feared would result more seriously; but it didn't—Slade, having had quite sufficient to satisfy him. All declared Mace to be perfectly justified in doing what he did. Warry Edwards and Wilson also set-to. Homer Lane and Matt Green wrestled, and Harry Hill swung the big clubs for the first time in a long while.

CAST UPON THE WORLD,
AN ENTIRELY ORIGINAL
DRAMA,
in 5 acts, written by
CHARLES E. NEWTON, ESQ.
and produced for the first time at WOOD'S MUSEUM, Chicago, on the 28th ult., by MR. J. K. MORTIMER,
and pronounced
A TREMENDOUS SUCCESS,
as the following EXTRACTS FROM THE PRESS will prove.
"* * * The plot is well worked up from first to last; the situations and scenes, while sensational, are consistent and true to the life, and the dialogue appropriate and well put together. * * * The play was well received, and many of the scenes received encores. CAST UPON THE WORLD will probably become one among the list of standard modern plays."—N. Y. Sunday Mercury.
"* * * was produced at the Museum on Aug. 28th to a well filled auditorium, and was enthusiastically received."—N. Y. Clipper.
"* * * The situations and incidents are quite dramatic and effective. Indeed the play is considerably above the average of sensational dramas, to which school it most unmistakably belongs."—Chicago Times.
"* * * It was produced for the first time in America at the Museum last night, and, to judge from the applause which hailed many of the scenes, it was a tremendous success."—Chicago Tribune.
"* * * The performance is pronounced a grand success over any previous exhibition on that stage."—Chicago Evening Journal.
"* * * As a faithful picture of life and manners in the nineteenth century, we venture to say it is unsurpassed."—Chicago Democrat.
Managers wishing to secure the right to produce this drama may address
HARRY CUNNINGHAM.
PARTICULAR NOTICE.

THE GREAT
MATTHEWS' FAMILY,
NOW PERFORMING AT THE
UNION SQUARE THEATRE.
Pronounced by the public and press to be the greatest and most Versatile Troupe that ever performed in this country.
THE WONDERFUL WILLIE MATTHEWS.
Miss LAURINA MATTHEWS,
THE GREAT FEMALE GYMNAST.
SEE WHAT THE PRESS SAYS.
Little Willie Matthews and his sister then sang a couple of duets with great effect—the audience appreciating them long and loudly. The entire Matthews Family followed in their acrobatic, posturing and contortive feats, in all of which they are unsurpassable.
The members of this family can do everything possible in the way of twisting themselves into apparently unthinkable knots, extraordinary summersets, and balancing each other's shoulders. One of their greatest feats is that of a boy standing on the shoulders of one of the family, throwing a somersault a distance of about eight feet, landing on the shoulders of another, and there maintaining his position. The family were repeatedly applauded after each of their extraordinary feats, and at the conclusion resulted to receive an ovation of applause. Those who take delight in acrobatic and gymnastic displays, should not miss seeing this wonderful family.—N. Y. Dramatic

THE YOKES FAMILY.
THE NEW YORK PUBLIC are respectfully informed that the YOKES FAMILY, who are engaged for a very brief term next year, at the New Union Square Theatre, New York, will appear only in their own original pieces, written, a ranged and acted by themselves exclusively, and entitled
THE SKILLS OF THE KITCHEN, PHOBUS'S FIX, and
THE WRONG MAN IN THE RIGHT PLACE.
N. B.—This notice is considered necessary, as certain unscrupulous members of the profession have already announced a spurious imitation of the first piece in New York; and others, unable to earn a salary in England, are on their way to the United States with the announced intention of pirating the twas of the YOKES FAMILY, who trust the public will not be prejudiced against the originals by the imbecile attempt of their would be imitators. 25-1i

The San Francisco Chronicle says:—
BELLA UNION THEATRE.—Miss Ella Wesner's performances possess sterling merit; she therefore wears well with the California public, as she would with any public in the world. Her repertoire seems inexhaustible, and she constantly produces new songs, giving the old favorites for encores. 25-1i

THE HALO ROUND THE MOON.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

When my first kiss on thy pure lips
I fondly pressed, and motionless
We stood with wreathed finger tips,
And eyes that swam with love's excess,
You said you feared the omen dark
That threatened us with storm full soon,
And, half in jest, you bade me mark
The halo round the moon.

Then dare it with me, love, I said,
And meet it smiling then as now;
Should sorrow's shadow bow the head
That sorrow's self should never bow.
What follows darkness but the day,
What lurks behind each night but noon,
Whose laughing sun shall chase away
The halo round the moon?

And since that time that years have shown
How brief life's storms when dauntless met,
And every separate year that's flown
Has knit our hearts but closer yet,
How memory holds that night endeared?—
We asked of Fate no farther boon—
But dared the augury, nor feared
The halo round the moon.

ANOTHER FATAL ABORTION CASE.

An inquest was held on Sept. 11th by Coroner Young in the case of Mary Russell, of No. 21 Ridge street, this city, whose death was alleged to have been caused by an abortion, produced by Ann Elizabeth Burns alias Brundage, of No. 116 Clinton street. Among the principal witnesses was Nelly Ryan, of No. 68 East Broadway, who said she had known Mary Russell since last April; was very intimate with her, as they occupied the same room; did not know until some weeks before her death that she was in trouble; she said that she meant to have an abortion performed, and asked witness to accompany her; she wished her to go to a house in Clinton street; went to the house of Mrs. Burns; saw two ladies there who were now present; Mary conversed with one particularly, namely, the prisoner; Mrs. Burns said she remembered her being there a week previous with another girl; she then told some stories and described what a nice country place she had on Long Island; Mrs. Burns said she could not administer to deceased unless she had a good place to stay in; Miss Russell told her that she had a good place at her aunt's, and Mrs. Burns consented to treat her; the two went into a small room together, being absent about two minutes; when they returned Mrs. Burns gave Miss Russell some instructions in regard to taking pills and powders, and told her to come back in a week if the treatment was not effectual; Mrs. Burns also told her that there was no danger of her dying, and that she must not, under any circumstances, tell any one who had treated her; Mary Russell went part of the way home with the witness and described the manner of the operation; she witness and described the manner of the operation; she had been required to stand up against the wall, while Mrs. Burns used a long syringe; saw deceased at the house of her sister and was told by her that she had had a child in the water closet.

Mary A. Conch, of No. 116 Clinton street, said that she had lived at the above number thirteen or fourteen years; was not married; rents the whole house and lets out the upper part as rooms; Mrs. Burns had the use of two rooms when she came from the country; Mrs. Burns used to come every Tuesday evening and remained until Thursday; Mrs. Burns told witness that she was a midwife, made breast ointment and attended to ladies in trouble; Mrs. Burns admitted using a syringe to procure abortion; on the evening in which Mrs. Burns was in town, from four to six ladies would call upon her; saw deceased when she first called upon the prisoner; Mrs. Burns told deceased that if any one asked who performed the operation she must not tell; during Mrs. Burns' absence in the country women had come and stated that they desired to have an abortion performed upon them; the syringe used by Mrs. Burns was a silver tube, about the diameter of a pencil and had a rubber handle, and in all about six inches in length.

Harry Pullen, of No. 101 East Broadway, a compositor, being sworn, said he was first introduced to deceased about a year ago; he was walking in Grand street and met her with a young man who introduced him; did not meet her again for seven months, when she came to live at No. 83 East Broadway; became intimate with her and quarreled with her subsequently in consequence of her going to picnics and parties with other young men; did not see her for a month, and did not know that she was in the family way; she sent for witness one day and said she was in trouble and asked him to take care of her; witness said he was not concerned in the matter, but that if she had a child promised to pay her board during her sickness, but declined having anything more to do with her; one evening, while sitting with deceased, she took a ring from his finger which he valued as a keepsake; he asked it back repeatedly but she would not give it, and having a falling out with her, he was obliged to send a friend; never heard of Mrs. Burns, and never in any way associated deceased about having an abortion performed; deceased admitted to witness that she had a child before, while living with a family named O'Reilly, in Sheriff street. After the testimony of several other witnesses, the prisoner was called upon to plead, and in answer to the usual questions said that her name was ANN E. Burns, by occupation a house-keeper, and that she was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., and lived near Centreport, Long Island. When pressed to state her age she answered evasively, remarking, "You can see I am not very young—besides ladies do not wish to tell their real age. Coroner—Well, tell us something. Answer (with a simper)—About thirty, or make it forty. Coroner—Have you anything to say relative to the charge here preferred against you? Council, speaking for his client, replied:—"I am not guilty, and at a proper time I will prove it to the entire satisfaction of the public. I never produced an abortion in my life." An application for bail was denied, and the prisoner conducted to the Tombs, to await the action of the Grand Jury.—N. Y. Star, Sept. 12th.

A LOST CHILD.

HOW IT WAS RECOVERED—DESPICABLE BABY BROKERAGE.

A somewhat singular case, illustrating one of the many phases of the "baby farming" business in this city, was brought before Inspector Dilks at the Central Office yesterday afternoon. Miss Minnie Lauthmann, a young German girl, residing in Newark, N. J., called on the inspector yesterday morning armed with a letter of introduction from a prominent gentleman in Newark, recommending the girl to the good offices of the inspector. Miss Minnie stated that she had come to this city in search of her child, an infant nine months old, who had been stolen away from her care. The girl stated that nearly two years ago she became acquainted with one Felix Brannigan, a resident of Newark, who is a conductor on a freight train running between Jersey City and Millstone. This man seduced her under promise of marriage, and the result was the birth of a bright little boy. Brannigan refused to marry her, and she thereupon sued him for seduction under the breach of promise, and the trial of the cause will come on in about a week. Miss Minnie has since been informed that Brannigan is a married man and the father of two children. On Monday last Brannigan called on her and told her that he had found a good home for the infant, with a childless couple, who were willing to adopt the babe and care for him. With this understanding she gave the infant to Brannigan and had not seen her since. Fearing that the child had been foully dealt with she had made inquiries and found that Brannigan had sent the child to "this city in charge of a Mrs. Habrarr, a German woman, living in Newark, accompanied by his brother, and that the infant had been left at the house of Dr. W. Willett, alias Banker, of No. 36 West Forty-fourth street.

Sergeant McElwain, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, was summoned, and was instructed to search for the child. A visit was paid to the establishment and an interview was had with the doctor, who at first denied all knowledge of the child, but on being confronted with Mrs. Habrarr, who had brought the child there, he confessed that he had received the infant, and had disposed of the babe by sending him to the Foundling Asylum, in Washington square. The asylum was visited and the child was found there, registered in the name of Frank Barton, which name was found on his clothes when found in the cradle at the door of the Asylum. Sister Irene, in charge of the asylum, says that when the child was found at the door he was suffering from some powerful narcotic which had been administered to the babe, and for several hours the life of the little waif was threatened. The child was given up to the mother and all the parties were brought before Inspector Dilks yesterday afternoon. It then transpired that Brannigan's brother, when he brought the child to the doctor's house, gave Dr. Willet $30, for which the doctor promised to keep the child until he could find some respectable family willing to adopt the babe, but within an hour after the child had been received at his house he had sent a woman with the child to the Foundling Asylum. As no offense had been committed and the mother had no complaint to prefer against the doctor, he was allowed to go, and Miss Minnie Lauthman took her child to her home in Newark.—N. Y. World, Sept. 14th.

JUDGED BY A FLIER.—THE LONG ISLAND CITY LOVER'S FRESH FREAK.—George McClosky and William Anderson, of Long Island City, courted the same girl, each ignorant of the other's infatuations, so skilfully did the girl arrange their calling and her conduct. But the deception was discovered at last, and each demanded the withdrawal of the other's attentions; but neither would retire. Each sought the girl's hand in marriage, but to each she pleaded for time to consider. Her procrastination led the rivals to suspect that their united attentions were too troublesome, and, to get rid of each other, agreed to fight in the ring. The girl will let into the secret. Both chose several particular friends and repaired to a wooded field near the city, and fought until McClosky lost the fight and claim to the girl's hand by exhaustion. Both fought desperately, and it will be some time before they can appear in society. The girl has played them both false. She went to the Ryan Association pic-nic and met an old New York admirer, and that evening he took tea with her. He is now her steady company, and she vows never again to fly two kites with one string.—Brooklyn Union, Sept. 13th.

OUTRAGE ON A STEP-DAUGHTER.—Frederick M. Steig, a German baker, was charged at Jefferson Market Police Court, on Sept. 9th, with outraging his step-daughter, Katie Lynch, aged 14 years. Katie alleges that on the 14th of February last, Steig called her into a back room, and having locked the door, committed the offence upon her, threatening to shoot her if she made any outcry. The girl's mother, who was Steig's second wife, was dead only fourteen days at the time. Three times subsequently, she states, he treated her in a similar manner. Steig was held in $1,000 bail to answer. The accused protests his innocence, and says the charge is a conspiracy.

DIVORCE FOR $3S.—John Reynolds married his first wife Celia on the 7th of June, 1860, and for a change took to himself Eva Sachs on the 7th of May, while Celia was yet alive. Both appeared against him in the General Sessions on the 12th inst., to prosecute him for bigamy. Celia was cross-examined, however, and the fact was elicited that she too had been married before she met John, and that her husband was living at the time of the marriage. When asked how she happened to marry John while her husband was alive, she answered that she got a divorce for $3S in the Fifty-seventh street Police Court. John was discharged, finding himself the lawful husband of the second venture.

A BLACK BIGAMIST.—Augustus Grear, a colored man residing at No. 125 West Twenty-fifth street, was charged at Jefferson Market yesterday morning, by his wife Ellen, with stabbing her in the arm with a table knife on Saturday night. In reply to a question of the justice, Ellen declared she did not or could not live happily with Augustus, because he shared his affections with another woman. "Is that so, sir?" said Justice Shandley. "Yes, yer honor, but she's in Philadelphia." "Then you want a writ in every city in the United States." "Yes, sar, when I go there, ye bet I'll go to Philadelphia." Augustus was backed over for examination on the double charge of assault and bigamy.—N. Y. Star, Sept. 11th.

THE SOCIAL EVIL.—A public meeting was held at Washington D. C., Sept. 11th, by the Women's Club, to take measures to mitigate the social evil; and, in view of which the police notified all the houses of ill-fame that their licenses had to vacate by Sept. 13th.

SUICIDES FOR LOVE.—Cupid, it is to be regretted to have to report, is chargeable with being the cause of many sad deaths, the number being added to almost daily. In part proof, we append the following cards, clipped from the N. Y. Sun of the 15th inst.:—

NEW LONDON, Sept. 14th.—This quiet city is, to-night, in a fever of excitement over a shocking murder and suicide. A half breed Indian, named Leonard Rogers, has been desperately in love for a year or more with the young and beautiful Hattie Lewis. Her reputation, however, has been very bad hereabouts, and she has led a disreputable, though quiet life. This noon she left the city and went out to the suburbs to the little village of Waterford and there was met by Rogers. What passed between them is not known. The house where they met is a house of bad repute. Angry words passed between them, and Rogers took a pistol from his pocket and shot her dead. The murderer then fled, but soon returned to the scene, took the revolver from his pocket and placed it at his temple and shot himself dead. Rogers was a respectable man of thirty or thirty-five years of age, a "decorative painter. The murdered girl was about eighteen years of age.

OFF VINEYARD HAVEN, Sept. 8th.—The following was picked up in a bottle in the Atlantic.

C. MAYHEW.

OFF POINT JUDITH, ANN., 10th, 1871.

ON BOARD R. F. ELY.—I am tired of life. Have been to camp meeting at the Vineyard, and have been disappointed in love. I am about to end my miserable existence. Any one finding this will please write to Moses Darrow, Esq., coal merchant, New London, Conn., who will inform my friends of my end fate. Good bye.

BENJAMIN TOUR.

ABORTIONISTS AT THE BAR.—Jacob Rosenzweig was arraigned in the General Sessions on the 15th inst., on an indictment charging him with manslaughter. Rosenzweig, when called to the bar, bore with dogged indifference the stare from every part of the room. His counsel pleaded not guilty, with the right of withdrawing it if it should seem necessary to interpose any special plea. District Attorney Garvin said that a woman had lost her life through the prisoner, and he was anxious to try him as soon as possible; but as one of the witnesses for the people was sick, he could not fix a day; yet he would say it should not be delayed long. When Capt. McCloskey was about to handcuff Rosenzweig for removal to the Tombs, the "Doctor" said:—"Dots all no goot; I vould nod run away for ten tousand tollars." But the captain, snapping the nippers with a satisfied smile, said:—"That's all right, doc, nobody's going to pay you for the effort." The woman Ann E. Burns, who is said to have caused Mary Russell's death, was arraigned on an indictment similar to the one against Rosenzweig, and a like plea was interposed in her case. She, too, received her share of the general stare as she marched up to the bar. After pleading she sat moodily in the prisoners' box.

A ROMANTIC RE-UNION.—A young man in the east wished to marry the daughter of a prosperous merchant, but he had no money with which to back his suit. He was therefore declined as a son in-law, and so he went to the Pacific coast to seek his fortune. He sought gold everywhere, but found little; and at last, after years of labor and hardship, determined to return to his old home. He engaged his passage from San Francisco, and when he encountered his early love, now near middle age, who, with her brother, had gone in quest of her old lover. Her parents and all her near relatives had died, save her companion. She was wealthy, and only too happy to give her fortune, with her hand and heart, to the man who had struggled valiantly and failed to earn the meed of toil. The twain were wedded, and returned to the east with the dream of love in its bright and palmy days, such as it had been years before. Even this practical age cannot extinguish the poetry of affection, devotion and romance.

TWO $10,000 BREACH OF PROMISE SUITS.—Emile Cattry, a young and wealthy Frenchman, of 123 West Twentieth street, was arrested last evening on a warrant from Judge Cardoza. He is accused by Miss Jennie Clark, of 19 Bond street, of failing to keep a promise of marriage. Damages are claimed in $10,000. Augustus Thompson, billiard saloon keeper, of Nineteenth street and Second avenue, was also arrested on a similar warrant from Judge Jones, on the complaint of Marietta Fomer, of 164 East Nineteenth street. This suit is also for $10,000 damages. Miss Clark is a bonnet maker, and Miss Fomer is a sewing girl.—N. Y. Sun, Sept. 17th.

A NOVEL WEDDING.—A novel wedding took place a few days ago in a shoe manufactory in Cleveland, Ohio. Two of the employees were placed on an elevator and were married by the Rev. D. C. Osborne. This over, a spring was touched and the couple ascended to the fourth story. Returning in a few moments, Mr. Osborne congratulated them on their happy bridal tour. Cake was then served on large sole leather plates.

A GLANCE AT EUROPE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,

BY A TRAVELING SHOWMAN.

Sight-Seeing in England.

STRATFORD-ON-AVON, THE BIRTHPLACE OF SHAKESPEARE—BIRMINGHAM—SHREWSBURY—BIRKENHEAD—LIVERPOOL—RETURN TO AMERICA.

A journey of thirteen miles from Warwick brings us to Stratford-on-Avon, the birthplace of the immortal Shakespeare; a quiet, pleasant old English town, situated on the river Avon, annually visited by crowds of travelers. The visitors' books in Shakespeare's house, in the church and in the principal hotels, contain many of the most distinguished names of England and America, and not a few of those most famous on the continent of Europe. The population of Stratford is 3,672. The occupation of the inhabitants is mostly agricultural. The birthplace of Shakespeare—the first spot to which the visitor naturally turns his steps—is a small building of ancient appearance, situated in Henley street. It has lately been renovated and repaired, but the improvements have not changed the appearance of the house at all, which still retains that familiar look that we see in engravings. The house now belongs to the British nation, is completely isolated from other buildings and heated by means of hot water pipes, so that the danger of fire is entirely removed. On entering the house you pay a sixpence to the old lady in charge, who shows you over the premises. You first enter an apartment on the ground floor, which has a very ancient and somewhat dreary aspect. It has the large fire-place of the olden time. A small room at the back opens into this, and a small passage from thence leads into the garden. We now mount a winding, wooden staircase, and enter the room where Shakespeare was born. It is little changed from the time the poet first opened his eyes within it. Everything is ancient, the furniture is old, and preserved with the most scrupulous care. The room has all the marks of the antiquity that is claimed for it, the ceiling is low, and the walls rough and bare. The walls and ceiling are dark with a million pencilled autographs. Pilgrims of all countries and all ranks have here inscribed their names, and the these signatures present a simple but striking instance of the universal homage of mankind to the great poet. Among the names scratched on the glass of the window is that of Sir Walter Scott. In this room is a desk used by Shakespeare, when a schoolboy; this is all cut and hacked by the schoolboys' knives. Glass cases, containing books, papers and miscellaneous articles, used by Shakespeare, are in the room adjoining; also, a fine oil painting of Shakespeare—a genuine portrait. Here are also portraits of Garrick, Ben Jonson, etc., glass cases containing Shakespeare's will, pieces of Herod's tomb from Jerusalem, articles made of the wood of his mulberry tree, the first copies of his works, letters, jewelry and mementoes, etc. We now descend to a large room on the ground floor, fitted up as a museum; here we pay another sixpence and inspect a miscellaneous collection of old arms, models of buildings, fragments of sculpture, articles used at one time and another by Shakespeare, etc. Shakespeare's grave is in the parish church, a sacred edifice which dates from the time of William the Conqueror, picturesquely situated, is approached through a beautiful avenue of lime trees, is of large dimensions and unusual beauty, consisting of naive, aisles, transepts and chancel, a square tower adorned with battlements and pinnacles, and surmounted by a graceful spire, rising to the height of 168 feet. The interior is in all respects worthy of the exterior, having ancient tombs with effigies in complete armor, and a curious inscription on an altar shaped tomb, dating from 1593, and which I made bold to copy.

"Heare borne, heare lived, heare died, and buried heare,
Lieth Richarde Hil thrise baillf of this borrow,
Two maidens of good fame he married in bodes feare,
And now reiseas'd in joi he resteth in ye worldis sorrow."

But that which gives a world-wide interest to this church is the grave of Shakespeare, a few paces from the wall in front of his famous monument, which is about five feet from the ground. The grave is covered by a plain flagstone which bears this inscription:—

GOOD FREND FOR IESVS SAKE FORBEARE
TO DIGGE THE DVST ENCLOASED HEARE,
BLESTE BE YE MAN YT SPARES THES STONES
AND CVRST BE HE YT MOVES MY BONES.

The monument upon the wall, and over the tomb contains a bust of the poet, with his arms and other devices. Shakespeare was born on April 23d, 1564, and died on April 23d, 1616. By his side lies his wife, Anne Hathaway, who died in 1623. Her tombstone bears the following epitaph:—

"Heere lyeth Interred the body of Anne, Wife of William Shakespeare, who departed this life the
6 day of Aug., 1623. Sette. 67 yeares."

Here are also the graves of his two daughters, Susannah and Judith. After visiting the birth place and grave of Shakespeare, we now turn to the place where he passed the latter part of his life and died. This house is no longer standing. It was in the garden here that the famous mulberry tree stood, cut down after Shakespeare's death, and made into canes, snuff boxes, &c. Part of the garden is now occupied by a small theatre. The chapel of the holy cross stands opposite this place, and adjoining it is the Guildhall, in the upper story of which is the grammar school, where Shakespeare was educated. The town hall has a splendid copy of Shakespeare presented by Garrick, the actor. The pedestal bears the well known words from Hamlet:

"Take him for all in all,
I shall not look upon his like again."

The interior is adorned with portraits of Shakespeare, Garrick and others. After enjoying the hospitalities of the Red House Hotel, we started for Birmingham, the great manufacturing town of England. Its population is 356,076, and it contains two theatres and several music halls. Sword and gun making are carried on here to a great extent, and it nearly supplies the world with steel pens. Our stay in Birmingham was very short, and our next stopping place was the old town of Shrewsbury, in the county of Shropshire. It is beautifully situated on a peninsula, formed by the windings of the river Severn, on two gently rising hills, crowned by lofty spires and towers, and presents an imposing appearance from every approach. Replete with historic incidents, its places furnish more varied features of attraction, whether as regards the interesting remains of olden times or the picturesque scenery that surrounds the locality. The town contains a theatre and a music hall. The public buildings and churches are very fine. About three miles distant is the site of the great battle of Shrewsbury, fought in 1403, between Henry IV and the Percys, in which Henry Percy, surnamed Hotspur, was killed, immortalized by Shakespeare in his play of "King Henry IV." The town was once encircled by a wall, but that has nearly disappeared, leaving only one of the towers standing. At the entrance of the town from the London road stands Lord Hill's column, said to be the largest Grecian Doric column in the world, and erected to the memory of Lieutenant General Lord Hill. Leaving Shrewsbury, we proceeded by rail to Birkenhead, crossed the Mersey and found ourselves in Liverpool, where we remained five days, visiting every place of note, theatres, circuses, music halls, museum, prisons, penny gaffs, Punch and Judys, the extensive docks, warehouses, &c. We took passage on the steamer Denmark, of the National line. The voyage was generally pleasant, and we arrived in New York after having, in the short space of five months, crossed the ocean, visited the principal places of interest in Ireland, Scotland, England, France, Italy, Switzerland, Germany, Belgium, and recrossed the ocean again, making one of the pleasantest tours that can possibly be taken. Au revoir.

THE END.

IT WAS A VERY HARD SHELL BAPTIST, of Tennessee, who suggested, when he heard of the reformation of an ungodly neighbor, that no ordinary baptism would do for that man—the only sure way would be to tie a grindstone to his feet and "anchor him over night in the middle of the river."

INDIAN LAWS.—The Puget Sound Indians have some queer laws about increasing the population. The Indian who is guilty of being the father of twins is driven into the woods to abide alone for three months. Triplets condemn him to perpetual bush whacking.

BONES GOES TO A TARGET SHOOT.

INTERLOCUTOR.—So, Mr. Bones, your excuse for your last absence is that you went on a target excursion. Did you have a good time?

BONES.—I rader guess I did. You see I don't 'zactly belong to de Ninth, but I couldn't make much difference, and he lent me a unicorn, wid supperlips on de shoulders, and dey give me de target to carry. Oh, I wasn't proud nor nuffin! for you see dat was de post of danger, and a werry high compliment to pay a feller.

INT.—How the post of danger when you were behind?

BONES.—Dat's de werry thing. Suppose dey'd all started to run; den I'd a been in de front, would'nt I? We started fo de ground one time wid anudder company, and as de steamboats was laying behind to each oder, side by side, de boys propose to de captains to hab a race. Well, de stakes was all deposited, and when de steam was blowed off and de bell was runs, and de horses was trowed off—

INT.—Stop, stop, sir; the horses! you mean the bowers!

BONES.—Well, I said de horses, and den de muss started in, and, sarier some backin' and fillin to git clear of each oder, we both got under way. Dere was great 'citement, and de bettin' fer around werry lively, and de pilots kept a screwin' de boats up to de highest notch, but fi didn't make much difference, as I see. Sometimes one was ahead, sometimes de oder, and somehow or oder we got two or tree foot ahead, and sometimes de oder, and somehow dey hug each oder so tight dat de passengers 'gun to get 'quainted a coursion. How! but it was fun! De fellers was jumpin' up and down and shakin de grounds at each oder from de opposite boats, and everybody was hollerin', and de music was playin', and I nebber see such a time! Well, bime by, de pilots got red in de face, and 'gan to swore at each oder, and somebody in de crowd got up and 'gan to swore at each oder, and de chilluns 'gan to yell, an' de gals dey 'gan to faint in de arms of de good lookin' young fellers, dey always select de good lookin' ones, like me, you know) and when we arrive at de wharf, what do you tink?—Why, de captins was both sufferin' from de effects of de bottle dey hadn't been unhitched from each oder at all; and so de stakeholder declare dat dere hadn't been no race, and put de stakes in his pocket and went off to get an order stew; and, boys, dat was me.

INT.—We will now have our new ballad—

"WE WEEP FOR OUR DARLING ONE, LOTTIE.

SONG AND CHORUS.

We weep for our darling one, Lottie,
She's gone from this gay world of ours;
The pride and and the joy of our cottage
Is sleeping beneath the bright flowers.
She has gone to the home of the angels,
To the land where no sorrow is known,
And we weep when we think of our loved one,
Who has left us so sadly alone.

Chorus.—We weep for our darling one, Lottie.
Her sweet cunning face we all miss,
When she said, "now I lay me" to pass,
And kissed him her last good-night kiss.

The flowers that she loved are still blooming
In the sunlight, as fragrant and fair,
And the birds are as joyously singing
As when our dear Lottie was there;
Our old home is dreary and lonely,
We hear her light footsteps no more,
But we'll soon be again with our loved one,
When we meet on that far shining shore.

Chorus.—We weep for our darling one, Lottie.

BURLESQUE ANECDOTES.

Twenty-five years ago there broke out a mania for theatrical anecdotes in England. Punch tried his hand at it. Here are some of his anecdotes, which are laughably like real ones:—

GARRICK used to drink nothing when he was acting but water gruel. His Romeo averaged four pints; but during the King Lear I have known him to take as many as three quarts in one evening. When he performed the walking gentleman, however, he preferred a glass of ginger beer with the white of an egg in it.

DICKEY STONE was the first to dress the "fools" in their present costume. Before his time the fools were dressed like courtiers, but the Earl of Essex having complained, Elizabeth got her "faithful commons" to pass an act for the alteration.

MRS. HUBBARD, the original "old maid" in "Have a Cap and Set a Cap," was a very great favorite in pathetic parts, as she was known to cry more naturally than anybody else. The secret of this was never known till her death, when there was found in the bequest in her will often pounds, to be divided in onions, every Christmas Day, among poor undertakers, out of prison.

I RECOLLECT Charles the Second coming incog. to the King's Theatre to see Nell Gwynne act Policotia in "Not Such a Fool as He Looks." Unfortunately, in those days there was no free list, and the king had not sufficient money about him to pay for a seat in the gallery, much less the boxes. The consequence was he was obliged to send Buckingham to a pawnbroker's with his hat and cloak, and with the money that was advanced upon them he paid for his own and his friend's admission. Nobody would have known this, only a Welch gentleman, happening to hiss Nell, when she was dancing between the acts, Charles picked a quarrel with him, and in a heat of passion struck him. Cards were instantly exchanged, but the king made a sad mistake, for, instead of giving his proper name and address, he presented to his opponent the very duplicate (made out in the name of Smith) which Buckingham had received for his hat and cloak. Charles would certainly have been found out by his own theatre, neck and heels, had he not been recognized by his green grocer just in time to be saved the exposé. Pepys alludes to this circumstance in his Memoirs, under Feb. 31st, 1668.

THE SARATOGA REGATTA.

CLIPPER'S SPECIAL REPORT OF THE FOUR-OARED AND SINGLE SCULL RACES.

Last week we gave a telegraphic synopsis of the four-oared and single scull races which took place on Saratoga Lake on Friday, September 15th, and we now present details thereof, omitting histories of the contestants, which have heretofore been given in full in our columns. For several years past the Saratoga Regatta has been the most exorbitant prizes even for Saratoga. The lake is situated about three and a half miles from the village, and is reached by a pleasantly drive along a well kept macadamized road, leading past the Saratoga Club House and the Saratoga race course. The lake is a beautifully situated on a bluff overlooking the bright, sparkling waters of the lake. In the Lake House, kept by one Moon, who is the very personification of extortionism, as many a poor devil who has unwittingly partaken of one of his meals will testify to their cost and sorrow, is the verdure-clothed bank, sloping gently down from the hotel to the water's edge, we found assembled upon our arrival, early in the afternoon, a large assemblage of spectators, very many of whom were ladies, impatiently awaiting the appearance of the crews, while the grand stand erected several hundred yards below, and overlooking the entire course, was well filled with the beauty and fashion of Saratoga. The sheds were crowded with carriages, and the number of vehicles on the road for half a mile on either side of the hotel was impassable by reason of the swarm of vehicles of every kind, occasions to which were momentarily made. In the early morning the lake had been in excellent condition, but towards noon a strong southerly breeze sprung up, quickly roadering the water very lumpy, and as it increased in stiffness as the day advanced the surface became exceedingly choppy, nasty white caps appeared, and consequently the referee ordered a postponement from 2 till Monday morning at 10 o'clock. The announcement was hailed with regret by all, but none could deny the necessity for the action taken. A return to town was now in order, and, after making a rush for their conveyances, and a scene of the greatest confusion ensued, owing to the almost impassable way in which the same were packed together in the road and the anxiety of everybody to be first away, which, of course, only made matters worse. Finally, however, a start was made, and amid a shower of blinding dust the disappointed excursionists journeyed back to Lovers. A number left for home that evening, being unable to remain any longer, and this, like all postponements, affected in some degree the success of the carnival, the crowd present on Monday, the 11th, being considerably less than on the previous day. The same scene of confusion was witnessed on the return to the usual stream of all sorts of conveyances pouring to and from the lake from seven o'clock in the morning until twilight. The day was lovely, the lesson of the night before slightly ruffled by an easterly breeze, and the journey thither much pleasanter than on Saturday, in consequence of the rain which fell on Sunday having effectually laid the dust.

The English crews and the Poughkeepsie four had been quartered at the Lake House since their arrival at Saratoga up to the evening of the 9th, when the former changed to the Marvin House, in town, because of the unwholesome manner in which their food had been prepared at Moon's. Their boats were placed on wooden horses in the lake in alley at the side of the house, where they were objects of interest to the visitors, particularly the fair sex. The Wards were located at Ramsdell's, a very pretty place, about a mile below the grand stand, being reached by a shady road along the bluff, while the McKee crew were quartered half a mile on the other side of the rickety bridge crossing the lake, and the Biglins at Myers' Hotel, some distance further on, and the best public house at the lake. Representatives of the different crews met Mr. Morrissey on the afternoon of the 8th, when officials were decided upon, and positions drawn for the four-oared race, Mr. M., for reasons satisfactory to all, constituted himself referee, while Benjamin F. Brady, of the Hudson Amateur Rowing Association, was chosen judge for the American crews, and Joseph J. Walton, correspondent of the Newcastle Chronicle, appointed by the referee to look out for the interests of the rival English fours, who preferred to be represented by boats themselves. Two steamboats were selected by these three—James Adams for the Englishmen and James O'Neil, of Troy, for the Americans. Messrs. Morrissey, Brady and Adams were stationed in a small pleasure steamer at the starting point, Lewis behind the line, while the other two occupied positions at the turning-stakes. Half-a dozen fl

BASE BALL.

MUTUAL vs. CLEVELAND.

On Tuesday, Sept. 12th, the Mutual club lost another match of the championship series, being defeated by the Cleveland nine in the closest and most exciting game of the series between them. The victory fell to the Cleveland by a score of 10 to 9, the umpire's decision being unfavorable for good fielding, and consequently both sides went into the muffin business to a considerable extent. The game opened badly, each side scoring six runs. Afterwards the play was sharper, in the fourth innings the Reds made two and the Trojans three, which gave the latter a lead of one run. This they held until the eighth innings, when the Reds scored five runs to the Haymakers' one. This sudden change in the affair made the Haymakers' chances of winning very slim.

The ninth innings was most exciting, and each play was watched with the greatest anxiety.

G. Wright hit a beautiful ball over Pike's head and made three bases. Barnes hit a long ball between centre field and left field and made three bases. Wright in. Birdsall first on a hit to second. Barnes in. Birdsall to second on a wild throw of McMullin's to Flynn. McVey out at first by Craver to Flynn. Spalding first on a short hit to left field, and is third on a wild pitch. Gould out on a fly by McMullin. Spalding home on a wild pitch. Schafer two bases on a good hit to left field, and came home on a passed ball. Barrows first on a muff of Pike's. H. Wright out on a fly by Pike. Two runs. On the other side York out at first by Barnes to Gould. Flowers first on grounder along third, to second on passed ball. Flynn first on a short hit to right field. Flowers in. McMullin out on a beautiful foul tip by McVey. Pike second on a good hit to over right field. Flynn in. Bellan first on short hit to left field. King and Pike in. Craver out on fly liner by Wright. Belian left on first. Four runs. The score:—

LIBERTY vs. WIDE AWAKE.

The first game of the match between the Wide Awake Club of Oakland and the Liberty Club of San Francisco, for the champion bat and the championship of the Pacific Coast, took place on Sept. 1st, in the Recreation Grounds, in the presence of a large crowd of spectators.

The Oaklanders were dressed in white shirts, tight-fitting light blue knee breeches, white stockings, and wore blue caps. The San Franciscans were dressed in white woollen shirts, with a large letter L on the breast, dark blue knee breeches, red stockings, and dark blue caps. The game was called shortly after two o'clock, by the Libertys going to the bat, Tobe and Miller ascending to their places in reaching the home base. Barnhead was not so fortunate, getting out before he reached his first. Taylor and Dunn managed to get home, when both J. and D. Kerrigan were put out, the side scoring five on the Libertys' tallies, leaving the Oaklanders even in. In the fourth innings the Reds made two and the Trojans three, which gave the latter a lead of one run. This they held until the eighth innings, when the Reds scored five runs to the Haymakers' one. ATHLETIC vs. FOREST CITY, OF CLEVELAND.

Note thstanding the strong counter attraction in the shape of the big day of the Northern Ohio Fair, a large crowd assembled to see the game played between these two clubs on the 14th inst. The game was called at half-past ten in the morning, and a pleasanter morning never smiled o'er a ball field. The Athletics made their appearance about ten o'clock and were heartily received; and, as usual, the Forest City contingent's game by game, put in their appearance shortly after noontide. C. M. Holly, of the Niagara Club, of Buffalo, was selected as the umpire, which proved to be a very satisfactory selection, his strictness in calling balls and strikes and his spirited manner giving entire satisfaction to all concerned. The Forest Citys batted first and went to bat. Rockoff getting in a run after being missed on a foul tip by White; the Clevelanders getting in two earned runs on safe hits by White and Force. In the second innings the Athletics another scamper ran by Tom Pratt, who was given his base on called balls, Pratt—having an eye blacked in the preliminary playing—stealing very nicely; the only particular feature of this innings being a hot liner, well taken by Force, of the Cleveland nine, by which he was retired. Kimball leaving H. White and Pratt on bases. Fisher got in one run through Johnson's slowness, for which he was sent to right field in the next innings, and a change made thereby for the worse, as the Forest City nine were soon to be old in the harness, while Manor White was no improvement at second; the Cleveland boys were white washed in this, and all the succeeding innings, Tom Pratt's pitching being very effective, none of the Rockfield batsmen succeeding to their base hit, and, as will be seen, below, only three base hits were made in eight innings of his pitching. In the fourth innings, Cuthbert, Malone and Fisher each contributed to the score, the former by bad throwing of Kimball, Malone on safe hit, and Fisher on muff of E. White; the next innings added three more to the score, two of which were earned, Meyerle taking first on called balls on Fisher's pitching; in the next innings the Pennsylvania boys were whitewashed for the first and only time, although Meyerle was a fine three-base hit.

The seventh innings yielded them another trio of runs, Rochtel, Fisler and Roach each earning first by good safe hits; Meyer's made a beautiful strike for three bases, but was left on the left, and the eighth innings Cuthbert tallied, getting his first on called balls, Roach, in the next innings, also made a run on called balls, Pratt closing the innings by catching a long fly of Cuthbert's.

The most particular points of the game were the fine catching of Malone, the fielding of Radcliff at short, of Meyerle at third (who was entirely waked up from that sleep the Philadelphia papers talked of), the effective pitching of Tom Pratt on the one side, and the looseness and muffing of almost every man on the other. OLYMPIC vs. PASTIME.

On Tuesday, Sept. 12th, the Pastimes, of Baltimore, played their first game this season with the Olympics, of Washington, to a large assemblage. The boys in blue, notwithstanding being short-handed, playing Thomas and Robinson, played a beautiful fielding game. The Pastimes, however, did miserably, both at bat and field, as appended score shows, although the Olympics couldn't bat Matthews:—

THE KEKIONGA CLUB.—A letter from the vice-president of the Kekionga club informs us that the nine of that club has been disbanded, and no more games will be played this season. He says that Mathews and Carey have been expelled for violation of their contracts. A stock company has been formed with a capital of $12,000, with which to open the season of 1872 with a strong and reliable nine. Capt. Harry Deal will visit the east in October to engage players for 1872. The last game won by the Kekiongas was their third with the Cleveland nine, won by a score of 15 to 3. Revolvers will receive special attention from the convention to be held in Cleveland next March.

Introductory Overture.

MONDAY, Sept. 18th, '71.

The season opens rich; we have sensations indoors and outdoors; we have startling revelations in the political arena, and indignation meetings whisper of vigilance committees and things to which a confiding and patient constituency have heretofore been unaccustomed. What with ambavits, long-winded speeches, crimination and recrimination, among our political rulers; demonstrations of working men in favor of the eight hour system; theatrical revivals and church revivals; shocking murders and atrocious robberies; and so forth; New York has no cause to complain of dullness; in fact, thus early in the season, the metropolis is in a whirl of excitement, and strangers are flocking to the city to see and share in the general enjoyment.....Talking of revivals, our venerable brother Allen is first in the good work, and his chapel nightly resounds with the earnest prayers of the faithful, the exhortations of the lambs, and the penitential avowals of the black sheep. We visited the chapel on Wednesday evening last; during the summer vacation a new coat of whitewash has been girded on to the interior, while the benches and floor and pulpit give indications that the scrubbing brush and its adherents have been doing valiant duty in this terrestrial vineyard. An air of freshness pervades the entire chapel—the worthy pastor and his pious lieutenants also present a renovated appearance, showing that a little rest is good for the soul, and that even the hard working brother Allen is all the better for a holiday in the dog days. Our brothers seemed alive to the importance of the occasion, and were entering into the spirit of the exercises with vim. Several candidates had responded to the invitation hymn "Come Ye Sinners," and one especially seemed to be an object of prayerful interest to the dear brethren, who prayed away at him like he was a first class criminal. He was charged with all manner of crimes; until at last the "poor and needy sinner" thought they had gone far enough, when he raised his weary head, and exclaimed, "Why I'm not half as bad as you're making me out—this thing's got to be stopped or I leave the bench!" At this same meeting a gang of unruly young white chaps were disturbing the congregation with their laughing and talking, until at last a plain-looking white man who sat on the bench behind them roared out:—"You damned young scoundrels, if you don't shut up I'll jerk you out o' this to hell and gone." They shut up, and the meeting proceeded without further interruption.....

Speaking of changes, we perceive that Bud Doble, who piloted Goldsmith Maid to victory, has turned musician, and is now occupied in beating time!.....Long nights are with us once more, and the sports are in their glory rolling round from place to place, stopping a moment here, "opening a bottle" there, and enjoying themselves everywhere. A few choice lines will better exemplify our meaning:—

"Oh, how sweet when daylight closes,"
And the gas is flaring high,
O'er the billiard cue to linger,
Or go ramping on the fly;
And in concert hall so handy,
With the music in one's ears,
Shake the dominoes up lively,
And put down school taper blur.

.....The imported female orchestra won't answer; they have not come up to expectations; in fact they do not equal the other Bergers! Some fastidious people remarked that they must be brazen creatures. Nothing is further from the truth, for there is not a particle of brass in their composition.....Lydia Thompson and the burlesque troupe, while seeking to make other people laugh, are oftentimes compelled to join in the merriment caused by the drolleries and ludicrous appearance of each other. We once saw an actress so convulsed that she could not act for full five minutes, during which time the audience accompanied her laughs by corresponding roars, and all occasioned by a "gag" of a utility man, who had never been guilty of any comicality before. It was in "Kenilworth," and the lady asked this utility man, referring to Wayland Smith, if he knew Smith; to which he replied blandly:—"Oh, yes, he's a L. H. P. H." She was curious to know what these initials meant, and so were the audience. Being questioned, the utility man courteously answered that "he was a Left Handed Polson Holster." That was all there was of the joke, but it stopped the play.

.....Estelle Western has met with great success as a impersonation of Madame Vine, in "East Lynne," but we regret to say that she is obliged to abandon that abandoned character now because she's "stricken blind." [That our readers may see this in its proper light and not be shocked by the news we have so gently imparted, we hasten to say that "Stricken Blind" is the name of Miss Western's new play.—Ed.].....'Oaity Goosh," whose humorous sketches have been perused with so much pleasure by the readers of the Clipper, has gone to be an actor, and makes his bow before a New York public this evening, at the Grand Opera House. Our broken-Dutch dramatic reporter will attend the performance in a body, and give his impressions of the merits of his fellow-countryman.....The papers declare that "the Isle of Bute is talked of in Scotland as a refuge for Pius IX." Is this the place that has so long and deservedly enjoyed the "Isle of Beauty fare thee well," notoriety?.....'Our Jim"—who has been reading about the new play of "Bertha, the Sewing Machine Girl; or, Death at the Wheel"—wants to know whether it was a railroad accident or a horse kick.....Although we have no direct evidence of the fact, yet our impression is that nigger minstrelsy must have existed in Shakespeare's time, for the great poet says!—

"The evil that men do lives after them,
The good is oft interred with their bones [illegible]"

"Alas! poor Yorick," may have been an end man in those days, since we are told that "he was wont to set the house in a roar," and although no mention is made of the stump speech, yet we have abundant evidence that the antics of the boys and jest as much fun with their false staff, which may have only been another name for our stuffed source of comicality.....The actresses of the present day "travel on their merits," but Olive Logan, who is "the moral critic," will no doubt sorely rail on her "Stage Women of To-day." Manager Wood, of the Museum, who has been reviving some terrible Western and his own company is now supported by horses.....Would it not be well to have a nursery attached to every place of amusement, where "children in arms" could be stowed away while their parents are enjoying the performance? "Soothing syrup might keep the crying evils quiet till the show was out. Who will act upon the hint?.....Dear friends, we have written up all the smart things we can think of at present, and claim your kind indulgence while we contrive a few comical rhymes about

THE DEADEST BEAT ALIVE.

Not long ago there lived a chap
Who was as very poor
That never entered always was
A smilin' at his door;
He passed his leisure hours away,
Of livin' to constitute—
For he was, he was, this gamesome cove,
The deadest beat alive.

He always dressed him in the best,
Out in the latest style,
And though to him fate frowned, he as'nt
But what to make a "smile."
And from the best cigars he used
Some relish to derive—
For he was, he was, this gamesome cove,
The deadest beat alive.

His dread of all Delmonico's
And drank the best green seal,
And of his wants ancestry
Most always would reveal;
And yet into "My Uncle's" we
Have often seen him dive—
For he was, he was, this gamesome cove,
The deadest beat alive.

Upon the smartest days he was
The features of Broadwayer,
And ogled all the petticoats
In such a killing way,
That all the girls would turn out strong,
And to entice him drive—
For he was, he was, this gamesome cove,
The deadest beat alive.

He floated with the Upper Ten
In halls of dazzling light,
And often at the opera
In white kids shone at night,
While on New York's new Boulevard
Fast coins he used to drive—
For he was, he was, this gamesome cove,
The deadest beat alive.

'Till, having once a little bill
On private terms to do,
Into a garret popped one day
A bent and smiling Jew.
Where on smoked herrings he to eke
Existence did contrive—
For he was, he was, this gamesome cove,
The deadest beat alive.

But at last the banks they found him out,
And gave him just ten year
In Sing Sing's spacious granite halls,
For shovin off the queer.
And yet each day we see him run
On Broadway up to five—
For he is, he is, this gamesome cove,
The deadest beat alive.

City Summary.

LOTTA does not appear to have added to her reputation by her engagement at Booth's Theatre. She has appeared in nothing but old pieces, and her acting in one of these is severely criticised by the Herald. During the past week she appeared in the "Pet of the Petticoats" and "Family Jars," both of which pieces are erroneously criticised by the paper alluded to as new. In reference to "Family Jars," the Herald says:—"If properly acted it would be really entertaining, but the characters are poorly sustained, and Lotta, as Biddy Lanigan, reaches the depth of vulgarity. Indeed, we are puzzled whether most to condemn the coarseness of the actress or the bad taste of the audience who applaud her." That's bad for "the temple of the legitimate."

THE LAST PERFORMANCE AT NIBLO'S GARDEN of "Frita, Our Cousin German," was given on Saturday evening, Sept. 16th, and this evening Mr. J. K. Emmet will appear for the first time in a new drama written expressly for him by Mr. Charles Gayler, and entitled "Carl, the Blind Fiddler." Ever since Mr. Emmet's debut upon the dramatic stage he has only acted in the drama first mentioned, and we opine there will be no little curiosity to see him in another character. We are creditably informed that the character to be assumed by him in this new drama will afford him ample scope for pathetic acting, Miss Rose Evans was withdrawn from the cast after Thursday evening, and the character of Katrina was acted by Miss Ida Vernon the balance of the week.

THE MANIFOLD ATTRACTIONS in "Humpty Dumpty" have served to fill the auditorium of the Olympic Theatre during the past week to its utmost capacity. The manager has succeeded in pleasing the popular taste, and is reaping a rich reward. The vagaries of Fox, the excellent clown; the graceful movements of the dancers; the light, picturesque scenery; the grotesque dances; the little of the performers; the songs of little Jennie Yeamans; the active movements of the Kiraify Troupe, together with the acrobatic performances of the Sprite, form a varied and pleasing entertainment, singularly free from coarseness or vulgarity.

AT THE FIFTH AVENUE THEATRE, the comedy entitled "Divorce" has continued the attraction of the past week, as it will be likely to for some weeks to come. Having already written at some length of its merits, we need only add that it is attracting good sized audiences to whom it apparently gives much satisfaction.

MISS LUCILLE WESTERN, assisted by James A. Herne and the stock company of Wood's Museum, acted in "East Lynne" during the entire past week, save on Saturday night, when "Lucretia Borgia" and "Lost in London" were performed. Miss Western's acting of these characters is so familiar to the general public that we need only say they were marked with her usual excellence. Her strong emotional powers rivet the attention of her audiitors, and her performances are interspersed here and there with flashes of genius. The plays were creditably placed upon the stage, and as a whole, well acted. At the usual matinees, save Saturday, when "East Lynne" was performed, "Bertha, the Sewing Machine Girl," has constituted the attraction. At the evening performances during the present week "Leah, the Forsaken," will constitute the programme.

MR. AND MRS. BANDMANN closed their engagement at the Grand Opera House with the performances of Saturday evening, Sept. 16th. They acted during the week in "Narcisse," save on the Thursday evening, when Mr. Bandmann was the recipient of a benefit, and the "Merchant of Venice" was acted with the following cast:

SHYLOCK..D. E. BANDMANN	Lorenzo.....W. H. Pope
PORTIA.....Mrs. D. E. BANDMANN	Old Gobbo.....Geo. Johnson
Launcelot Gobbo.....M. W. Fisher	Salanio.....J. B. Bratone
Bassanio.....Theo. Hamilton	Salarino.....Mr. Stinson
Gratiano.....E. F. Thorne	Balthazar.....D. Barclay
Antonio.....C. W. Barry	Leonardo.....Mr. Carpenter
Duke.....J. H. Hind	Stephano.....Mr. MacEvoy
Tubal.....C. T. Parsloe	Servitor.....Miss Somers
	Jessica.....Miss Edith Challis

M. W. Fisk and Theodore Hamilton made their first appearances this season on that occasion. The attendance during the entire week was quite limited. This evening Mr. Gus. Phillips, known as "Dotty Goofl," makes his debut as an actor upon the dramatic stage, in a play written expressly for him and entitled "Dotty Goofl."

MISS LYDIA THOMPSON and her new company commenced the fifth week of their engagement at Wallack's Theatre on Monday evening, Sept. 11th, when was produced a musical burlesque, re-written and adapted from Offenbach's opera-bouffe, entitled "The Princess of Trebizonde," which title had also been retained for the burlesque. It was acted with the following cast:—

REGINA..LYDIA THOMPSON	Tremolina.....Hetty Tracy
Cabriolet.....Harry Beckett	Zanetta.....Camille Dubois
Manola.....Willie Edouin	Prince Raphael.....Carlotta Zoppa
Prince Cadmir.....H. Montgomery	Chouffeur.....Millie Cook
Dr. Sparadrap.....John Bryer	Broccoli.....Lotta Mrs.
The Lottery Keeper.....	Flamingo.....Kate Egerton
Mr. Broughton	Francesca.....Miss Hall

It is in three acts, there being but one scene to each, the first a public square with mountebanks performing, the gardens of a baronial hall and an apartment in a chateau. It was not well adapted to display the peculiar talents of either Miss Thompson or the members of her company, and as the opera had never been performed in this country, the majority of the audience, it is fair to suppose, were neither familiar with the music nor the plot of the opera, which marred, in a great degree, the enjoyment of the burlesque. We could discover but few traces of Offenbach's music therein. The most familiar air was that of "Mari Sago" from "La Belle Helene." The dialogue was neither sparkling nor witty, and the puns were far-fetched and lacked originality. The only really meritorious part of the performance was the stage setting of a brief burlesque melodrama in the last act, which occasioned a great deal of hilarity. As a whole, the performance may be recorded as a comparative failure, and so the management seems to have regarded it, as it was withdrawn after the performance of Saturday evening, Sept. 16th, and during the present week "Blue Beard" will be replaced upon the boards and acted the first three nights, and during the remainder of the week "Little Nell" will be performed. The engagement of this company will close on the 23d inst., and the theatre will probably remain closed until the 27th, when the regular fall and winter season will be inaugurated.

AT THE SAN FRANCISCO MINSTRELS the changes upon the programme during the past week consisted of the following:—In the first part C. Templeton sang "Farewell Mother," D. S. Wambold's excellent tenor voice was heard to advantage in "Don't be Angry with me, Darling," and Billy Birch sang with comical effect "I'm Lonely no More." In the second part Templeton, Shattuck, Oberist and Dwyer sang with much effect the quartette, "Come Where my Love lies Dreaming." Bobby Newcomb performed a new song and dance, written and composed by himself, entitled "Pretty Little Minnie," which was fully up to the standard, and the performances closed with a new extravaganza written by Bobby Newcomb, entitled "Two B'hoys; or, Men of the Period," which created considerable mirth. The average attendance has been good.

KELLY AND LEON'S MINSTRELS appeared in a new programme during the past week, almost every act being fresh. The old time first part was resumed, in which E. M. Kayne sang "I Will be True to Thee;" Dave Wilson, "Everything, Anything, Nothing;" Edwin Kelly, "Mother, Take Me Home Again;" Billy Rice, "If Ever I Cease to Love," and Charles Storme, "The Swiss Girl's Dream." The finale being "Carry the News to Mary." In the second part Leon appeared in new specialties, entitled "Chicago" and "Chinny Lanlin's Speech," which met with favor. And the performances concluded with a burlesque upon the highly sensational dramas now being performed throughout the country, entitled "A Dime Novel," which was written by E. C. Wright and Edwin Kelly. S. S. Purdy, who has recently returned from California, will make his re-appearance this evening, Sept. 18th; also the Hoffer Tyrolean Troupe are announced to appear.

AT NEWCOMB AND ARLINGTON'S MINSTRELS, in the first part, Fred. Walz sang "Kiss Me to Sleep;" Edwin Barton, "Strike the Harp Gently," and the finale was changed to "A Trip to Fatherland," in the second part Arlington, Meyers and Sam Price acted a comic scene entitled "Dignity and Impudence;" J. S. Edwards, in his protean acts, represented "Uncle Jeff, of Baltimore," a "New York Cabman," and sang a parody entitled "Out of That Saloon;" Andy McKee performed a new song and dance called "I'll See You Again;" and a sketch entitled the "Call Boy's Tribulations," in which J. S. Edwards played three characters, concluded the performance.

AT THE BOWERY THEATRE good sized audiences have been attracted by the re-production of John F. Poole's Irish drama entitled "Shin Fane," with T. G. Riggs in the leading characters. Some trifling alterations had been made in the closing of the first and last acts, by which several incongruities, which we mentioned on the first production of this drama, were dispensed with. Mr. Riggs appeared to advantage in his several characters and the drama seemed to act more closely and smoothly as the performers had become more familiar with their parts. It was preceded nightly by the "Married Rake." For the present week, "Bertha, the Sewing Machine Girl," will be acted, preceded by a petite comedy entitled "A. S. S." D. L. Morris is underlined for an early appearance.

MISS ELIZA WEATHERSBY and her sister, Miss Jennie, who have recently returned from England, have been re-engaged with the Lydia Thompson Troupe and will make their first appearance this season at Wallack's Theatre, on Friday evening, Sept. 22d, in "Inrline," for the benefit of Miss Thompson, and on that occasion the fair Lydia will also appear in "A Day in Paris," sustaining four distinct characters.

PROFESSOR GEORGE F. BRISTOW, one of our leading composers and musicians, we are happy to state, has nearly recovered from a severe illness, the chief phase of which was nearly losing his sight.

RIGGS AND FITZGERALD, dramatic agents, 681 Broadway, want a quartet, an end man, a middle man and several other artists for South America, also a premiers danseuse. For further particulars see the advertisements.

RICHARD FITZGERALD left the city Sept. 16th for Cincinnati, O., whither he goes to superintend the production of the "Black Crook" at Wood's Theatre. He took with him Millie Tournour, the Leslie Brothers and Harry Clifford, the comedian.

THE UNION SQUARE THEATRE was opened for the fall and winter season on Monday evening, Sept. 11th, when a large audience was gathered which filled the entire auditorium in every part. On Thursday evening, when we last through the performances, another large audience was present to entertain and commenced with a burlesque entitled "Ulysses; or, The Return of S. O.," which was cast as follows:—

Ulysses.....Mr. Felix Rogers	Medon.....Miss Lizzie Wheaton
Penelope.....Miss E. Grelian	Eurymachus.....Miss Belle Howitt

Its dialogue was not particularly lively, but it was very liberally interspersed with popular music, which was very well sung by the principal characters, aided by a chorus consisting of Messrs. Schwicardi, Kelly, Morgan, Waddleton, Hurley and Coes. The ladies were charmingly costumed and acted with much vivacity. Felix Rogers, who acted Ulysses, made that character a Jew in the earlier portion of the burlesque, and his assumption was quite successful. He afterwards appeared, made up in resemblance of General Grant, which was in questionable taste. Most other nations have stringent laws restraining caricature representations of the sovereign ruler upon the stage, but in this country we have no laws upon the subject. The burlesque, which had been considerably curtailed since the opening night, acted nearly one hour. In the closing scene Mlle. Marie Bonfanti, Mlle. Bertha, premieres, and the corps de ballet performed a divertissement, and were rapturously applauded. The ladies of the ballet were richly and elegantly costumed, their dresses being parti colored, the fronts being of crimson and the backs of white silk, profusely decorated with silver lace. The ballet corps of this theatre, for beauty of form and feature, combined with terpsichorean skill, is thought to be superior to any of the number who have hitherto appeared in this city. Miss Annie Adams, a serio comic vocalist, succeeded their performances, singing "I Walk the Grand Parade," with much dash and spirit. She was loudly applauded and was re-called. When she sang a song about a Scotch drummer and "That's the Man for Me." Her voice shows somewhat the marks of much usage and has acquired a slightly metallic quality, and she is given to a redundancy of action. Still her efforts are pleasing and she may be said to have made a success. Hughey Dougherty then came upon the scene, and in one of those burlesque orations of which he is one of the best exponents upon the minstrel stage, amused the audience for some twenty minutes with witty allusions to local affairs, the first part of his oration being fresh and concluding with his familiar dissertation on "Love." He was warmly welcomed and received well merited applause on his conclusion. Fred Foster, comic vocalist, then appeared and sang "Piccadilly," and in response to a generous encore sang "Don't Stop My Beer." After a brief interval of a moment or two he re-appeared, clad in female attire, as a girl of the period, and sang a medley embracing the following airs: "A Young Girl of the Period," "Tommy Dodd" and "I Dote on the Military." His make up was excellent, and his features being of an effeminate cast aided in no little degree the deception. The manners and graces of a fashionable young lady were successfully imitated. The Mathews Family, eight in number, from London, Eng., then made their American debut. Three scenes were employed to display their entertainment. In the first two young ladies performed a number of dances, which were characterized by grace and agility. In the second, Master Willie and a young Miss of some eight or nine summers sang a number of duets and performed some dances. They are talented children, particularly Willie, who performs with a degree of intelligence far beyond his years. In the third scene the entire family, except the little girl just referred to and one who danced in the first scene, appeared in a series of acrobatic feats, which were cleverly performed, displaying much agility, flexibility and strength. The family consists of one gentleman, two ladies, one little girl and four boys. James F. Wambold followed, with his banjo performances, which were favorably received. Ashcroft and Morton then performed a song and dance, and were compelled to respond to two encores. They are old favorites and were warmly greeted upon their appearance. M'lle Geralding and George Leopold then gave several acrobatic performances upon the high trapeze, and the entertainment concluded with a pantomime by the Martinetti-Ravel Troupe, entitled "Pat-a-cake-Baker's Man; or, The Adventures of Paul and Virginia," cast as follows:—

Old Growler...Alfred Martinetti	Sunbeam.....Madelaine Hardy
Bobby Slydog...Julien Martinetti	Meteor.....Albert Martinetti
Paul.....Paul Martinetti	Pantaloon.....La Petite Adele
Virginia.....Mlle Desire	Policeman.....Mr. Rattler
Mrs. Cucumber.....A. Martinetti	Head Waiter.....Mr. Myers
Mrs. Caudle.....Louise Le Comte	Barber.....Mr. Wambold
Mrs. Salmon.....Mons. Justin	Carpenter.....Mr. Shaving

HARLEQUINADE.

Clown.....Julien Martinetti	Columbine.....M'lle Desire
Harlequin.....Paul Martinetti	Sprite.....Albert Martinetti
Pantaloon.....Alfred Martinetti

The pantomime was well performed, the tricks working promptly and the antics of the clown and pantaloon creating much merriment, while the dancing of Paul Martinetti, the harlequin, and Mlle. Desire, Columbine, was a pleasing feature of the performance. The long association of the artists composing this company with the celebrated Ravels has given them a degree of excellence that it would be difficult to surpass. The season has thus had a propitious commencement, and we opine not that it will be carried to a highly successful termination. We were pleased to see that a large proportion of the audience were ladies. The programme of the week was a little too long, which, we presume, will be remedied in the future. The auditorium presents an elegant appearance. A large sunlight in the dome, aided by numerous chandeliers, with three burners each, on the side walls, lends a softened light throughout the auditorium. The ceiling of the dome is elaborately frescoed, little cupids and wreaths of flowers appearing in various positions, while immediately over the proscenium are large figures of Comedy and Music. The side walls are decorated with a delicate French grey, relieved with pink, white and gold. The private boxes, of which there are two on either side in the proscenium, are elaborately upholstered and carpeted, and their fronts adorned with rich work. At the top of the lower box on either side is perched a small cupid holding a wreath of flowers. The boxes are placed between two columns reaching up to the proscenium arch and apparently supporting it; these are painted a light green color, and their bases and capitals are richly carved and ornamented in white and gold, relieved with a light tint. The orchestra is handsomely fitted, the railing, upholstered with crimson enameled leather, and each row of seats is so raised that the spectators are insured a clear view of the stage over the heads of the persons sitting in front of them. The front of the balcony circle is open wire-work, and the front rail, as well as those of the private boxes and the enclosure for the band, are upholstered with crimson plush. The acoustic properties of the auditorium are excellent. The main entrance from the street and the staircases ascending to the upper tiers are spacious, while over the portico on the street is a large and elegant sign, having the words, "Union Square Theatre," formed of glass prisms, which, when illuminated at night by gas or reflecting the sun's ray by day, throws a brilliant coruscation of many colors. This sign was furnished by McLewee & Putnam, who have made this business a specialty. The attaches of the house are affable and polite, and every exertion is apparently made upon the part of the manager to insure the comfort of his patrons. The performances, thus far, have been entirely free from any approach to vulgarity, and it is evidently the intention to present a variety entertainment of a higher order than has hitherto been given in this city, and so far their efforts have been crowned with success. Robert W. Butler, the manager, brings to the performance of this task the experience of many years, during which time his efforts have ever been successful. He possesses much energy, and seems to thoroughly understand what the public require.

THE TENNA LADY OPERA TROUPE is the title applied to a company of musicians, some twenty in number, who commenced a series of performances at Steinway Hall, on Monday evening, Sept. 11th. All the performers of this organization are young ladies, said to be still in their teens, who have a comely appearance, some of them even possessing beauty. They have evidently received a good musical education, and possess considerable skill in performing upon their various instruments; and their performance in part of the selections they rendered, consisting of a brief burlesque melodrama in the last act, which occasioned a great deal of hilarity. As a whole, the performance may be recorded as a comparative failure, and so the management seems to have regarded it, as it was withdrawn after the performance of Saturday evening, Sept. 16th, and during the present week "Blue Beard" will be replaced upon the boards and acted the first three nights, and during the remainder of the week "Little Nell" will be performed. The engagement of this company will close on the 23d inst., and the theatre will probably remain closed until the 27th, when the regular fall and winter season will be inaugurated.

RICHARD FITZGERALD left the city Sept. 16th for Cincinnati, O., whither he goes to superintend the production of the "Black Crook" at Wood's Theatre. He took with him Millie Tournour, the Leslie Brothers and Harry Clifford, the comedian.

MRS. ANNA PENNOY, Miss. Vanoni, Mr. Barre, baritone, of the Mikado troupe, and Pauline Gaston, arrived in this city from England during the past week.

PROFESSIONAL male and female, are wanted by Harry Hill for a new variety theatre, 32 East Houston and 141 Crosby street, Saturday.

COL. T. A. BROWN, dramatic agent, 713 and 720 Broadway, states that he intends leaving for Europe on Sept. 30th, one week earlier than previously announced, and during his absence the business of his office will be attended to by Mr. Robert M. Stevens, who thoroughly understands the business. Mr. Bankes, protean comique; Frank S. Currier, pianist; Miss Wessel, character change vocalist; M. J. Parker, business manager; Louis Gaspard, leader of orchestra; Mlle. Zenotti and Mons. Herent, double trapeze performers; and the Mahitt & Barthelmew pantomime troupe can be secured through his agency. He also wants an attraction for Tweddle Hall, at Albany, N. Y., during the fair week, commencing Oct. 2d, and advertises two opera houses and a hall to let.

MISS S. F. SMITH, daughter of the late Rev. William A. Smith, D. D., of Virginia, is to give a recitation of Tennyson's "Maud" at St. Paul Chapel, at the corner of Fourth avenue and Twenty-second street, Tuesday afternoon, September 26th, at 3 o'clock, P. M.

To Managers, Agents, Doorkeepers and Others.

Every regularly authorized correspondent of the NEW YORK CLIPPER is supplied with the necessary credentials, in the shape of a card with an engraving of the CLIPPER Building on one side, and on the other side the name of the correspondent, city, etc., signed by the proprietor of the paper, with the stamp of the office, and dated Sept. 1st, 1871, affixed thereto, each card running for six months, when new ones will be issued on the return of the old, but one representative being recognized in each place. We particularly request that managers of concerts, shows, etc., will decline extending favors to any person representing himself as correspondent of this paper who cannot produce the card referred to. By acceding to this request, managers will not be imposed on by irresponsible parties.

MRS. JOHN DREW'S Arch Street Theatre, Philadelphia, was opened for the fall and winter season on Saturday evening last, the audience being densely packed in every part. The house has been completely cleansed and repainted, while the stage appointments have been enriched by costly and elegant additions. A full list of the company and house officers was given in a previous issue. The performance opened with "A Bold Stroke for a Husband," which was cast as follows:—

Donna Olivia....Mrs. John Drew	Don Vasques (first appearance).....Neil Gray
Don Cæsar (first appearance).....Mr. Lanagan	Manuelle (first appearance).....Miss J. Laurens
Don Julio.....Barton Hill	Donna Marcella....Mollie Meeder
Don Vicentio.....Adam Everly	Ines.....Miss Summerfield
Don Garcia...Claude Burroughs
Vasques.....Walter Allen

The comedy was charmingly performed, and the lady manageress was warmly greeted. Mr. Hill also received a hearty recognition, as did Mr. Everly. The comedy was succeeded by the farce "Your Life's in Danger," which gave Edmund Coles an opportunity to display his comic powers. Sam Kemple, Mrs. T. A. Creese, Mr. McDonald, Mrs. G. F. and Miss Mollie Meeder also appeared. The performance concluded with the old farce of the "spectre Bridegroom," in which Mr. Charles Jefferson, son of Joseph Jefferson, appeared as Diggory, and exhibited considerable comic talent. He was lonely applauded at times, and again greeted with roars of laughter. Mr. Hassler conducted the musical department. Mr. Charles Mathews Family opens on the 18th inst., as Mr. Mopus, in "Married for Money," and as Phel ability; Harry Phillips was cut up to the mark as Dicey Marris, in either make-up or reading; Elise was admirably played by Belle Golden, who charmed everybody by her fine acting and singing, and Miss Ella E. Risser as Jane Overton looked and dressed the part charmingly. "Ici Baigne" will be played during the week, and on "Monday next" commencing "Aurora Floyd" will be the bill.

Another sends the following report, dated Sept. 16th:—"The first production in Chicago of Mr. Bronson C. Howard's comedy of 'Saratoga,' occurred at McVicker's new theatre on Monday evening last, in presence of an unusually large and brilliant audience. The play had been in active preparation for several days, and with the same preparation for several days, and with the possible exception of that to the fall strength of the possible company and receive an elegant scenic dress, we went prepared to see the piece presented in a style of splendor, and we are pleased to state that our expectations were realized. The play has met with success, and the attendance has been large thus far, and from present indications 'Saratoga' is destined for a long and successful run. It is lively with dividing incidents, rollicksome, and humor is rife throughout, is amusing, while the dialogue is racy and sprightly. The scenic effects are really superb. The several scenes in which the play is located are as perfect similations of nature as art can produce, and reflect unstinted credit upon the scenic artist, Mr. J. Howard Rogers. So thoroughly had the play been rehearsed that the first night's performance passed off without a blemish, and entirely free from the usual first night indecision. The part of Kate Remington in the hands of Miss Cameron, is invested with all the jollity and mirth essential to make it interesting. Mrs. Mary Myers, with her handsome costuming, quiet, artistic acting, and sweet and expressive face, makes the part of Virginia particularly pleasing. Mrs. J. H. Kemble made her first appearance this season as Lucy Carter, and played the same in a pleasant and charming style. Mr. Stoddard Stonehill, Brook, R. G. Reed and Miss Palmer filled their respective characters with credit. Mr. Wheelock's personation of Bob Sackett was a genuine dramatic success. His dressing was in excellent taste and in keeping with the character, while his acting may be set down as one of his greatest efforts. Mr. Bascombe's Sir Mortimer Muttonfogg—an English type, as an admirable piece of acting; his make-up in faultless and his cockney drawl is perfectly free from the usual exaggeration. Mr. Powers' Jack Benedict is highly commendable and one of the finest personated characters in the play. The balance of the cast was in excellent hands.....Robert Reece's new three-act English comedy of 'Not so Bad After All,' was presented for the first time in Chicago—and we believe in this country—at Col. Wood's Museum, on Sept. 11th, to a full audience. The play is really brilliant and sparkling, dialogue entertaining, and situations pleasing. The plot is quite simple. Capt. Herbert Marchmont—a brave and gallant officer in the army—on a thorough state of subjugation, and is kept dancing attendance on his wife, a lady gifted with a great capacity for repose or laziness. A party of friends, among whom are three of his former brother officers, arrive, and seeing the situation, resolve to effect an immediate cure. They make all the household servants feign illness. The hen-pecked husband—seeking into the conspiracy with the real—also feigns illness, which Marchmont becoming alarmed at the tide of affairs, and the condition her husband is in, and in the absence of any one else, bestirs herself to cook a mutton-chop for him, in response to his piteous appeals. The conspirators rush in and catch her in the act, and the curtain falls with the heroine perfectly cured of her laziness, and a promise to reform. The play is being presented in a highly creditable manner, both as to mounting and acting. The first performance was perfect, noticeable for its evenness, and, from the outset, the play has proven an unmistakable success. Miss Freeman personates the heroine, Mrs. Marchmont, in a charming style, and is the personification of laziness. Miss Hattie Whitney is deserving of more than a passing notice for the fine manner in which she enacts Mrs. De Brunt. Emma Madeira makes a capital Sally the Maybud, and acts the part with spirit. In Mr. Mortimer we have an excellent Capt. Marchmont, which is played in his accustomed good natured style. Mr. T. C. Howard's assumption of Lieut. Worthington is praiseworthy; his dressing of the part is perfection, and it is a cleverly rendered part. Mr. J. L. Saphore made his first appearance in the role of Smart, and by his clever acting and make-up created a favorable impression. Messrs. Grosi and Martin were in their happiest manner and contributed greatly to the success of the piece. The performance concluded with the farce of 'His Last Legs,' in which Mr. Langrishe personated O'Callaghan with signal success. Mr. Gross' acting of Mr. Rivers was particularly good, and he fairly divided the honors with Mr. Langrishe. Since the first night the attendance has been large, and the bill has given entire satisfaction.....Al Hoddee the week opened with the first production here of Albery's comedy, entitled 'Twoedie's Rights,' supplemented with the comedy of the 'Serious Family.' The first named comedy proved a decided failure and was shelved after the second night. Mr. Padgett labored assiduously to make the piece a success, but in vain. In the 'Serious Family,' Mr. Lawlor's Capt. Murphy Maguire was in every sense a well rendered part, and has never been surpassed on any stage in this city. Miss Dargon's rendition of Mrs. Delmaine was a fine effort. The balance of the cast was from fair to bad. On Wednesday evening the old but always acceptable play of 'Camille' was produced, with Miss Dargon in the title role. Miss Dargon's personation was perfectly natural and thoroughly effective throughout. She was well supported by Mr. Lawlor as Armand Duval, Mr. Standish as Gaston, and Miss Campion as Nichette, each of which were entitled to much praise. The play was handsomely mounted, as usual with all plays at this theatre. So much success has attended the presentation of this piece that it is announced for next week. J. C. Padgett has accepted the stage management, Mr. Fitzpatrick having resigned the position.....Quite a lively little fracas occurred yesterday, between Mr. A. L. Parkes, of the Rankin Comedy Company, and Mr. H. Barre, husband of Miss Jennie Worrell. It appears Mr. Barre was greviously offended at certain remarks made by Mr. Parkes derogatory to Miss Worrell's character, and meeting Mr. P. yesterday, he proceeded to avenge himself by pulling the nose of the said Parkes. A lively time was anticipated, but the spectators were doomed to disappointment, as Parkes declined to pick up the gauntlet thrown down by Mr. Barre, and thus the affair ended."

THE ADELPHI THEATER, Nashville, Tenn., will be opened about Oct. 15th, and stars and combinations are requested to address the manager as per advertisement.

MANAGERS wishing to produce "Shin Fane," are referred to Jno. F. Poole's card in another column.

"BERTHA," Charley Foster's Sewing Girl's play, was presented at the Brooklyn Academy on Sept. 15th and 16th, to very slim audiences, this style of the sensational not suiting the atmosphere of the Academy, nor the taste of its frequenters. The play was fairly presented and tolerably well performed.

THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Bloomington, Ill., was entirely destroyed by fire on Saturday, Sept. 9th. A correspondent, writing Sept. 14th, says "that it is supposed to have been the work of an incendiary. It was owned by Jas. Dolan, of Peoria. The loss is about $45,000. Mr. Niegarth, formerly proprietor but now lessee, loses about $12,000, including the unexpired term of his lease—4 years and 2 months.....The Royce Hall is now the only place open for amusements, its seating capacity being about 850. The Kane Putnam party occupies it this week. From here they go to Pekin during the fair week, thence to Jacksville, Springfield and Decatur. In consequence of Scranton trying to buy up the lease on his opera house, now used as a billiard hall, so as to re-open it again.....The Ashley House, well known as the showman's headquarters, has been closed for repairs, but will be re-opened again shortly.....Joe H. Keane and company were in Lincoln last week to good biz. They are in Decatur this (last) week."

THE PARK THEATER, Brooklyn, L. I., was opened for the season on Sept. 11th, under the management of Messrs. Carroll and McCloskey, the opening week being marked by the production of Maeder's "Help," with Joe Murphy as the star character, the result being crowded houses nearly every night, despite the unpropitious weather of Wednesday and Friday. This week Murphy retires in favor of the late Ada Harland, who is announced to appear for one week in "Lola," in which she exhibits her versatility of talent. The weekly stars receive efficient support from the new stock company at the Park, a prominent member of which is Miss Jennie Carroll.

A FULL COMPANY and a singing walking gent or juvenile are wanted for a southern tour with Rose and Harry Watkins. Address as per advertisement.

FROM SAVANNAH, Ga., our correspondent, writing on Sept. 15th, sends the following:—"The season at the theatre will be inaugurated on Thursday evening, Sept. 21st, by Templeton's troupe from the De Give Opera House, Atlanta. The management promises a great variety of amusements, during the winter, and all first class. The theatre has been newly decorated, painted and upholstered, the scenery being greatly improved, and many new scenes added, that old and efficient artist, Capt. Sandrue, having been busily employed for the last few months."

JOHN A. ELLSLER, Jr., will transfer the company of the Pittsburgh, Pa., Opera House to the Main street Opera House, Johnstown, Pa., for three nights, commencing Sept. 21st.

STRENIC'S DRAMATIC COMPANY performed at Connellsville, Pa., during the past week, and are announced to re-form at Waynesburgh during the week commencing Sept. 18th, and at Wheeling, W. Va., 26th.

MAJOR M. TOLLY is about to build a new theatre at Shreveport, La. It will be located on Miam street, and will be commenced in November.

JAMES MACE, POOLEY MACE, DOONEY HARRIS, and a dramatic company are announced to perform at Rochester, N. Y., Sept. 21st.

MARSTON AND STONE'S DRAMATIC COMPANY are billed to perform at Reading, Pa., Sept. 20th and 21st.

EDWIN CLIFFORD'S DRAMATIC COMPANY, with Miss Jenny Morton as the star, performed during the past week in Fond du Lac, Wis.

MORLACCHI, the dancer, closed her engagement at the Holiday St. Theatre, Baltimore Sept. 16th. Among the stars engaged for that theatre are F. S. Chanfrau, Percy Roselle, an infant prodigy, J. K. Emmett, G. B. Buckley, Johnny Thompson, Edwin Adams, and Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Florence.

FORD'S NEW OPERA HOUSE, Baltimore, Md., is to be inaugurated Oct. 2d, with the J. W. Wallack Combination. Among the stars engaged for that theatre are the Lydia Thompson Company, Lotta, Parepa Rosa Opera Troupe, Maggie Mitchell, Jane Coombs Combination, Mrs. Bowers, and the Januauschek Company. L. R. Shewell is the leading man.

To Managers, Agents, Doorkeepers and Others.

Every regularly authorized correspondent of the NEW YORK CLIPPER is supplied with the necessary credentials, in the shape of a card, with an engraving of the CLIPPER Building on one side, and on the other the name of the correspondent, city, etc., signed by the proprietor of the paper, with the stamp of the office, and date of Sept. 1st, 1871, affixed thereto, each card running for six months, when new ones will be issued on the return of the old, but one representative being recognized in each place. We particularly request that managers of entertainments will decline extending favors to any person representing himself as correspondent of this paper who cannot produce the card referred to. By acceding to this request, managers will not be imposed on by irresponsible parties.

SHIRLEY'S COMIQUE, Buffalo, N. Y., is doing a thriving business. The stars this week were Fanny Valade, the Weston Sisters, Clara Dow, Mr. R. C. Hart, Miss Dora Nelson, Miss Lucy Adams, Mr. Frank Bell and Mr. Harry Miller. Miss Valade's songs were received with much favor. Miss Lucy Adams is an old favorite, having appeared two seasons ago at Weston's Opera House. Her sketches are rendered par excellence. Mr. R. C. Hart ranks high as an Ethiopian comedian. His "Old Black Joe" was received with peals of laughter. Miss Clara Day still attracts the applause of her audiences. Bonnie Nelson is a clever performer. The Weston Sisters are agile danseuses. The entertainment concluded with Mr. Hart's farce of "Where's Anthony?" which abounded in mirth. New stars will appear next week. On Friday evening, 14th, about 10 o'clock, while one of the ballet ladies was in her dressing room, her false hair became ignited from a gas jet. Miss Lucy Adams, who was in the same room, at once ran to her assistance, and she herself was badly burned by her clothing taking fire. A blanket was at length procured and the flames smothered. At present writing Miss Adams is comfortable, and likely soon to recover from her injuries. The other lady's mishaps were confined to the destruction of her false tresses. So wrote our correspondent on Sept. 16th.

PEDARVO, gymnast, &c., is at present performing at Wild's Opera House, Syracuse, N. Y., where he can be addressed.

THE BEST VARIETY ENTERTAINMENT presented in Washington, D. C., for a long time, was given at the Metropolitan Hall last week. The new additions to the company consisted of Professor James Campbell, ventriloquist and punch and judy performer, and Bobby Daly, sensational song and dance man. Prof. Campbell presented what he terms his Theatorem. It consists of a regular punch and judy box, and the figures are worked by himself and Mr. Daly, who, of course, are concealed as in a punch performance. The figures were very dexterously manipulated, and were made to imitate persons of different nationalities in a very perfect manner. During this part of the entertainment the audience indulged in repeated demonstrations of approval, which was evidence that the Professor had made a hit from the very start. Mr. Campbell afterwards gave scenes in ventriloquism, in which he gave imitations of animals and insects. Bobby Daly appeared in a very comical act called the "Fat Men's Ball." He introduced a great deal of new business, his antics while executing the accompanying dance to the song being laughable in the extreme. Later in the evening he and Patsey Shay (who, by the way, is remarkably clever) appeared in the festival dance "Come and kiss me." Dan Howard and Joe Mack, in the sketch "You don't say so," created a great deal of mirth; Gussie Lameraux in her changes; Kitty Rowell in serio-comic songs and Kate Brooks in Irish ballads assisted in making the performance good in every respect. Joe Mack has charge of the stage during the absence of Mr. Porter, and Dan Howard retains the position of interrogator. For to-morrow evening, the 19th, more new faces are promised. So wrote our correspondent, on Sept. 17th.

MR. J. H. RATHBONE, professionally known as J. H. Reynolds, visited Washington, D. C., during the past week for the purpose of attending a meeting of the Grand Lodge of the Knights of Pythias, and while in that city was the recipient of a complimentary serenade.

THE COMIQUE, Milwaukee, Wis., is doing a good business. At John R. Gregg's benefit, Sept. 6th, the house was filled to overflowing and standing room was in demand. The following new faces put in appearances on that occasion and still remain in the company:—Miss Emma O'Neil, balladist; Miss Jennie D'Arley, song and dance lady; Billy B. Morris, Dutch comedian; Master Billy Payne, musical genius; Mr. K. Wells, trick clown and man monkey; Mons. Leon, contortionist, together with Messrs. Frank Drew, Claud de Ville, Billy Wild, Geo. Forsythe, John R. Gregg and Chas. Williams, making as good a variety company as ever was in this city. So wrote our correspondent on Sept. 14th.

AT DENIER'S NOVELTY THEATRE, Titusville, Pa., the new faces this week are Ettie Bowers, Mark Hughes and E. H. Brink. Negro Minstrelsy and Female Minstrels are a feature of this establishment. Mark Hughes and Tony Ryan hold the ends to advantage, and are received nightly with applause. Maggie Willett's "I'm Lonely To-night" and "Mary Aleene," by Ettie Bowers, are received with great enthusiasm. So wrote our correspondent, Sept. 14th.

NELLIE LOVE'S THEATER COMIQUE gave two performances in Dunmore, Pa., Sept. 14th and 15th, where they intend to re-organize for the fall and winter season.

TONY PASTOR, returning from his successful western tour, passed a few hours in Philadelphia, Pa., among his old friends, and while there Mr. Fox, the manager of the American Theatre, in that city, presented Tony with an elegant ring as a token of friendship. It is a cameo with an elegant female figure—in the act of dancing—in bass relief, and the cameo is entirely surrounded with a circlet of diamonds.

HARRY WILLIAMS' VARIETIES, Council Bluffs, Iowa, was opened for the regular season Sept. 9th, with Thomas Sands as stage manager and the following company:—Ed. Wells, Charles Peasley, Billy Hansen, Ed. Coons, John Carroll, the Clifton Sisters (Mollie and Jennie), Lizzie Burgess, Nettie Coons, Laura Castle and Cora Wirtz.

DELEHANTY AND HENGLER commence an engagement at the St. James Theatre, Boston, Mass., this evening, Sept. 19th. During their sojourn in that city they will produce two new acts, one entitled "Larks in the Park" and the other a "Hottentot Act," in which the peculiarities of that race will be closely imitated.

MISS LOTTIE HAMILTON, now sojourning at Bay City, Mich., will commence an engagement at Lon Chapin's Varieties, Scranton, Pa., Sept. 25th.

ADELINE FONTAINBLEAU, gymnast, ceiling walker, &c., can be addressed through her agent, Harry Cunningham.

CINCINNATI VARIETY NEWS is detailed by our correspondent, up to Sept. 15th, as follows:—"The only new appearance this week at the Race Street Theatre is Alexander Ricolls, pantomimist, who plays Pedro in the pantomime of 'La Moor,' which concludes each evening's entertainment. He is supported by Charles Coriell as Sancho, Belle Williams as Molenet, Carrie Austin as Lizette, and Mrs. Fred McAvoy as M'lle Santio. Tableaux and dances are introduced into the pantomime, which have the merit of varying a little from the usual attractions of the ballet. This week Master Frank Rivers repeats his contortion act, and also plays the "Drummer Boy Act.' Coriell performs his clever bone solo, and Belle Williams, Carrie Austin, Nellie Halloway, and Mr. and Mrs. McAvoy sing ballads. The two latter also perform their pretty musical act, 'Molly Dear.' Nellie Halloway was joined in wedlock this week to a gentleman named Halliday. Mr. and Mrs. McAvoy take a benefit to-night (Friday) appearing as Mr. and Mrs. Toodles, and to-morrow close their engagement. They are to open at Tony Pastor's, New York, on the 25th. Both are clever artists, and have a number of original acts. John Wild is engaged to open here on Monday next.....Apollo Hall is now running quite a strong company, embracing P. H. Seamon, ventriloquist and comedian; Chris. Ransom, comedian; A. Speare, song and dance; E. Speare; J. Smith; Mollie St. Martins, vocalist; Gertrude Banks, jigrist; Lizzie Johnson, danseuse; la petite Eugenie, dancer and vocalist. The burlesque 'Old Folks' is given at the opening, instead of a 'first-part,' and succeeds well. Seamon's 'Peter Honts Family' is a prominent feature in the entertainment, and the place seems to be well patronized.....Pacific Garden, which is the prettiest variety hall in the city, and no garden at all, is now giving a good show, though without a single female performer. The vocalist portions are done by F. Grady, Jim Hays and J. P. Hill. Charles and Edward Gregorie appear in carpet gymnastics and club exercises, and J. P. Hill also does a trapeze act. A burlesque, entitled "The Jap-on-Knees," winds up the uproar at this hall.....The Olympic Hall continues to do a paying business, with Charley Sullivan and Master Willie on the ends, and M. A. Griffin as interlocutor. This 'Master' Willie does a good song and dance, is a tolerable comedian, and is large enough to support a regular name without blushing, his extreme youth being rather on the wane. The singing and dancing of M'lle Augusta, and vocalisms of Minnie Warner, seem to take well. The programme contains no novelties."

AT THE FRONT STREET THEATER COMIQUE, Baltimore, Md., business during the past week has been excellent. In addition to the regular olio bill by Charles Peasley and Judy performer, and Bobby Daly, sensational song and dance man, Prof. Campbell presented what he terms his Theatorem. It consists of a regular punch and judy box, and the figures are worked by himself and Mr. Daly, who, of course, are concealed as in a punch performance. The figures were very dexterously manipulated, and were made to imitate persons of different nationalities in a very perfect manner.
